On a subsequent day, and before the trial Judge proceeded to take evidence, he questioned the pleaders of both parties, and recorded that the plaintiff's pleader stated that the plaintiff claimed to have the transfer declared invalid, on the grounds.

1. That it was really made after 22-12-1875, and was made fraudulently.

2. Even granting that the transfer took place before 22-12-1875, it was voluntarily made, and was invalid under S. 24 of the Indian Insolvency Act.

The trial Judge did not make any alteration in the issues which he had recorded.

Held that an alteration in the issues raised was not necessary, and that the question whether the transfer was voluntary and fraudulent and void as against the assignee was sufficiently raised (105-6). (Sir Richard Couch.) MILLER P. SHEO PERSHAD. (1883) 10 I. A. 98=

Appealable cases—Issues important in—Findings on

-Recording of -Necasity.

The Courts below, in appealable cases, by forbearing from deciding on all the issues joined, not infrequently oblige this Committee to recommend that a cause be remanded which might otherwise be finally decided on appeal. This is certainly a serious evil to the parties litigant, as it may involve the expense of a second appeal as well as that of another hearing below. It is much to be desired, therefore, that in appealable cases the Courts below should, as far as may be practicable, pronounce their opinions on all the important points (488). (Lord Justice Turner.) The respondents' contention was EXECUTION—UNDUE INFLUENCE—PLEA OF—ISSUE AS upheld by the Sudder Court on special appeal. On further (1875) 2 I. the Sudder Court ought not to have decided the cause on the question of forcelosure, because that question, though raised upon the pleadings, had not been made one of the issues settled in the Court of first instance, where alone evidence could be taken.

Their Lordships gave effect to the objection, and remitted the cause for the trial of the question whether appellant's right, or equity of redemption, had become foreclosed or barred (15).

It is clear that there has been no such trial of the question of foreclosure as the Regulation (Bengal Regulation XXVI of 1814, S. 10, cl. 3) which prescribes the statement of formal issues, and indeed substantial justice, require (13-4). -No surprise to opposite party.

The plaintiff claimed to be the lawfully begotten son of P, and to have inherited from his father the property sought to be recovered in the action. The defendant alleged (amongst other things) that P was not the father of the plaintiff, and an issue was framed on that point. In the course of the litigation in the Court of the first instance, however the defendant at an early stage, without protest or objection on the part of the plaintiff, made the case that the plaintiff had been adopted by P's brother, A'. Deeds under the hands of the plaintiff and his father P containing express statements to that effect were given in evidence by the defendant. Questions directed more or less pointedly to the matter were addressed to the plaintiff's witnesses. Evidence was given by and on behalf of the plaintiff to explain away the admissions contained in those instruments and to account, if possible, for the fact that on the death of K the plaintiff had been put forward as his successor. No suggestion was made on behalf of the plain. tiff that he was taken by surprise. No application was made that the pleadings should be amended, a new issue framed, or the hearing adjourned. The Subordinate Judge considered the question of adoption and held against the plaintiff. The High Court on appeal, while being of opinion that " the question of adoption was never properly in issue between the parties," held on the assumption that it was, " that the defendant had wholly failed to satisfy the onus which lay upon her of proving the adoption."

While regretting that a definite issue was not framed upon the point of adoption, and the matter thus put beyond all controversy, their Lordships held that the question had been sufficiently raised between the parties, and refused to frame a specific issue on the question and to remit it for trial. Failure to frame-(Contd.)

REVERSAL OF DECREE ON GROUND OF-(Contd.)

Concurrent findings of the Indian Courts on a question of fact were sought to be attacked before the Privy Council on the ground of the failure of the trial Court to frame and record the material issues. It appeared that no objection was taken in the Court of the first instance to the case being dealt with without the settlement of the issues, that the parties had gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was, and that the necessary evidence had been taken. The omission to raise the issues was brought before the notice of the appellate Court, which, while being of opinion that the Court below ought to have framed the necessary issues, affirmed its decision and declined to remand the case, because the parties had gone to trial knowing what the real question between them was, the evidence had been taken, and the conclusion had been in the opinion of the appellate Court correctly drawn from that evidence.

Held, that under S. 354 of C. P. C. of 1859 the appellate Court had power to do what it did (583).

At all events, it appears to their Lordships that there is nothing in the Code which made it imperative upon the appellate Court, or now makes it imperative upon their Lordships, to yield to that objection (the omission to frame the issues) and, therefore, fully concurring in the observations made by the appellate Court that it was the duty of the Judge to settle the issues, they still think that, under all the circumstances of the case, substantial justice having been done, there has not been that fatal mistrial of the cause which vitiates all the proceedings and renders a new trial necessary (583).

If objection had been taken in the trial Court to dealing with the case without the settlement of the issues, the appellant would have stood on higher grounds, and it would then have been very difficult to say that a trial proceeding in the face of the objection could be held to be regular for any purpose. -Remand order of High Court-Points at issue in dicated in.

A suit by a junior member against the holder of an impartible estate for maintenance was dismissed by the Courts below on the ground that the estate was the selfacquired estate of the holder and not ancestral property. In special appeal, the High Court reversed the decrees of the Courts below, declared that the estate was ancestral, and plaintiff entitled to maintenance from it, and remanded the suit to the Court below with instructions " to ascertain the means of the defendant and the other facts of the case, and to proceed to a decision in the manner indicated in S. 35 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1859. That Court decided the case without framing issues and its decree was affirmed by the High Court. On objection taken on further appeal to the Privy Council to the failure to raise issues as directed by the Code of 1859, held that the remand order of the High Court removed any such objection, because that was, in substance, an order for inquiry, and an order for inquiry raising the very points upon which the defendant relied; for it was a direction to ascertain amount of the maintenance which might appear to be justly and properly payable with reference to the very point which it was urged ought to have been taken into consideration, viz., the means of the defendant, in connection with the other facts of the case. It is impossible to object to such an inquiry as that, upon the ground of its not being sufficient. It is, therefore, equivalent to issues, and rendered any further issues entirely Unchastity found against-Conduct "suspicious"-Opinion as to-Propriety.

Held, that an opinion of that kind was unsatisfactory. Either the allegation of unchastity was established or it was not; if the evidence was not sufficient or not reliable, there was an end of the charge so far as the particular matter in issue was concerned, and it was hardly proper to give expression to what the Judge calls "suspicion." Their Lordships entertain a very strong conviction of the absolute necessity of adhering to Madras Regulation XV of 1816, for it is, in their Lordships' judgment, of the utmost importance for preserving the regularity of the proceedings in that country and for preventing constant confusion and uncertainty as to what really are or are not the points in litigation, and to which the evidence is to be directed. They conceive that this Regulation has been most wisely framed first, in affirmatively directing that the points on which evidence is to be taken shall be distinctly set forth, and that it shall be a duty imposed on the court, if those points do not appear to be sufficient for the final termination of the litigation, that they should state distinctly, as a matter of record, the further points on which evidence is to be taken. Further, the Regulation, after having thus affirmatively stated what is to be done, goes on to state what shall not be done :- "In like manner, if proof shall be required on any other points in the course of the trial, such points shall be recorded on the proceedings, and the proper party shall be called upon for the requisite evidence, and no exhibit shall be filed or witnesses summoned, unless expressly declared to be in proof or refutation of some point upon which the Court may have directed that evidence should be taken." It is, in the opinion of their Lordships, therefore, indispensably necessary, for the purpose of supporting and securing the compliance with this most wholesome Regulation, that they should act in conformity with it. The appellant, on the other hand, contended that A, though the ostensible purchaser and registered holder of the properties, was a mere manager and trustee for her and her family. One of the issues in the case was whether the disputed properties were the own properties of A. The trial Judge adopted the intermediate theory that the suit property was acquired from the proceeds of a trade carried on by the appellant and her husband in partnership, and that the shares of the profits in this joint concern, being undisclosed, must be assumed to have been equal.

Held that the trial Judge, in dealing with the issue set out above, might properly have adopted and acted upon that intermediate theory, though it was inconsistent with the appellant's case as it was first launched, but that there was no satisfactory evidence to establish that case (220-1). # PRACTICE-NEW TRIAL

-Exidence-Admission or rejection improper of-New trial on ground of.

The Common Law Courts in England have considered themselves compelled to grant a new trial, if any evidence had been improperly admitted or rejected at Nisi prius, however little it may weigh, because the objecting party might have tendered a bill of Exceptions, upon which the Court of Error would be bound to grant a tenire de neve; and, to save the delay and expense of such a proceeding, it has been thought more convenient that a new trial should be granted by the Court in whi h the action was originally prought. But it has been certified to us that a different rule prevails in the Supreme Court of Calcutta. The same individuals being Judges and jurymen in that Court, the proceeding would be preposterous, if, in their character of Judges, they were to grant a new trial before themselves as jurymen, by reason of the admission or rejection of evidence which they feel could not alter the verdict. They very properly follow the practice of equity Judges in England; where an issue has been granted, and an application is made for a new trial, on the ground of the improper rejection or admission of evidence, then no Bill of Exceptions lies; and although the objection is in strictness well-founded, a new trial is granted or refused, according to the importance of the evidence which has been admitted or rejected. # PRACTICE-NON SUIT-JUDGMENT OF.

-English chancery practice.

The objection to a judgment of non suit under the old chancery practice in England was this: It enabled a plaintiff, after he had dragged the defendant into court, if he found the case going against him or that he had not the requisite materials to support his claim, to elect to be nonsuited, With the result that he could bring a fresh action and so harass the defendant with further litigation. The judge at the trial was powerless; the plaintiff was dominus litis. The term "non-suit" was not known in chancery. There was no such thing as "a decree of nonsait". (Lord Macnaghten). #### DISMISSAL OF SUIT FOR-PROPRIETY.

Defendant—Non-joinder of a—Dismissal of suit against original defendant on ground of Joinder of that defendant in appeal and remand of case—Objection to remand order by original defendant—Maintainability,

The Court of First instance dismissed a suit on the ground of the non-joinder of N as a defendant. On appeal the High Court directed N to be added as a defendant, which was accordingly done, and remanded the suit for the trial of issues which had not been disposed of by the Court of First Instance. On further appeal by the original defendant to the Privy Council, held that the suit was not bad for non-joinder as against the original defendant (appellant before the Privy Council) and that the order of remand was not bad in law by reason of the fact that N was aided as a defendant when the suit was in appeal before the High Court.

N was not at any time a necessary party to the suit so far as the appellant is concerned, nor has he been prejudiced by the fact that N was added as a defendant when the suit was in appeal. (Sir John Edge.) ANANDA GOPAL v. NAFAR CHANDRA PAL. (1913) 18 C. W. N. 259 = 21 I. C. 928 = 26 M. L. J. 86.

Plaintiff-appellant-Death of-Substitution of defendant as his L. R.

-teregularity-Recersal of decree at instance of L. R. on ground of Substitution on his own application.

Suit No. 316 was instituted on behalf of B, a minor, by his natural father, as his next friend, for a declaration that he was the validly adopted son of one K, having been adopted by the appellant, A's widow, under an authority to adopt executed by him in her favour. The appellant was a defendant in the suit, and she was a substantial defendant, The first court found against the authority to adopt set up by B, decided against his title, and dismissed his suit. Against that decree B preferred an appeal and died pending the appeal. The appellant (being, on the assumption of B's adoption being valid, his heiress-at-law) was, on her own application, substituted for R as appellant, notwithstanding her character as defendant in the suit. The appellate court concurred in the findings of the lower court, and dismissed the appeal.

On appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the appellate court, the appellant contended that her substitution for R made by the appellate court, which made her both plaintiff and defendant in the suit, was grossly irregular, and that its decree ought to be reversed on that ground.

Held that, assuming that the substitution of the appellant was grossly irregular, it was an irregularity of her own seeking, and, having sought to contest the correctness of the decree below unsuccessfully, she could not get rid of the decree in appeal on the ground of such irregularity (302.) Plaintiff sued for the recovery of certain property on the allegation that though the property was purchased by A, his adoptive mother, benami in the name of B, yet that she purchased it out of her own separate income so as to make it her property and that plaintiff, as her heir, was on her death entitled to the property. The defendant denied that the purchase was made with the money of A, and averred that the property was purchased with the money of B. the person in whose name the purchase stood."

The issue framed with reference to these contentions was "whether A was entitled to, and in possession of, all the contested properties by acquiring them benami in the name of B as alleged by the plaintiff, or whether they were purchased by B with his own money as alleged by the defendant. Held, that the issue was, in substance whether the plaintiff's story, stated in his plaint, was true, or whether the defendant's story, stated in his answer, true; and that, if neither of the stories was true, the really material alternative of the issue was its first part, whether the plaintiff's story was

It is not as if the defendant's defence was a plea in confersion and avoidance, a plea which admitted that the plaintiff's story was true, and then avoided it. If that had been the case, and the defendant had failed to prove his case, of course the defendant must have failed and the plaintiff ought to recover. But it is substantially what at Common Law is called an argumentative traverse of the truth of the plaintiff's story, for it does not admit that one word of it is true, but sets up certain things perfectly inconsistent with it. The real truth is that the second alternative of the issue ought to be rejected, and the real question is whether A was at the time of her death entitled to and in possession of all the contested properties by acquiring them benomi in the name of B as alleged by the plaintiff. If the plaintiff fails to prove the affirmative of this issue, plaintiff must fail, and it is perfectly immaterial whether defendant proves his case or not (307.8), RAJA CHANDRANATH ROY P. The passage in the plaint in which it was said that the mother was entirely under the dominion and control of her daughter was introduced only incidentally in connection with the allegation of mental incapacity, which allegation formed the real case of the plaintiff. WHAT AMOUNTS TO-ENGLAND AND INDIA-DISTINCTION.

-Express admission-Omission to deny-Effect.

It is a mistake to assimilate (as was done at the hearing) the proceedings in the Indian Courts to the practice in the Court of Chancery in England. There the plaintiff has the means of compelling a distinct answer, "yes" or "no", to any allegation which he makes, and, therefore it is not sofficient for him to say such or such a fact is not denied by the answer, he must read an admission of it. The proceedings in the Indian Courts are of a totally different character (291). (Mr. Pemberton Leigh.) DOUGLAS v. COLLECTOR OF BENARES. (1852) 5 M. I. A. 271= 1 Suth. 231 = 1 Sar. 434.

CO-DEFENDANTS.

-Written statement filed by, in suit by third party-Admission in-Effect inter se-No cateppel.

A pleading by two defendants against the suit of another plaintiff can never amount to an estoppel as between them (559).

In a suit, two of the defendants, in their answer, made a statement in respect of an alleged mortgage transaction with the object of defeating the plaintiff's claim, which was false. In a foreclosure suit brought subsequently by one of the defendants against the other founded on such alleged mortgage, held that the admission in the answer in the prior suit did not preclude the defendant in the later suit from pleading that the statement in such answer was false and intended as a fraud on a third party (559). -Having admitted that the plaintiff's ancestor did obtain possession by virtue of a decree, and that he remained in possession for a year, the defendants also, in the same written statement, alleged that the mortgage set up by the plaintiffs was collusive and a benami transaction. without necessity, and that there was no necessity for the sale to the defendant.

The defendant did not in his written statement deny that the plaintiffs and their father were agriculturists to whom the custom alleged by the plaintiffs would apply.

EFFECT OF-ENGLAND AND INDIA.

It scarcely needs to be remarked that the effect given in our Common Law Courts to admissions on the pleatings has always been greater than that given to admissions in the less technical pleadings in the Courts in India (125). FACTS ALLEGED IN PLAINT.

-Admission by defendant of- Defence based on those facts-Filing of-Effect.

The defendant in his rejoinder is simply to deny the truth of the reply of the plaintiff, or the parts of it which he means to dispute (291).

Where, so far from denying those facts, the defendant founds his defence upon them, they must be treated as admitted. It is a mistake to assimilate (as was done at the hearing) these proceedings to the practice in the Court of Chancery in England. There the plaintiff has the means of compelling a distinct answer, "yes" or "no," to any allegation which he makes, and therefore, it is not sufficient for him to say such or such a fact is not denied by the answer, he must read an admission of it. The answer of the defendants was as follows:- "From the scatement in the plaint that, subsequent to the death of the maternal grandmother of the plaintiff, her three daughters lived some in a married state, some in a state of celibacy, and that all the properties left by his grandfather devolved upon his mother, it is evident that this suit has been instituted merely from a malicious and vindictive motive. For agreeably to the Dhurm Shasters, and Dayabhaga, though any weman after obtaining paternal properties becomes a widew or sterile, yet nothing can bar her right to enjoy the said property during her lifetime; therefore the statement that subsequent to his maternal aunts becoming wislows the right and interest to all the properties devolved upon his mother is utterly false and falla-

Held that there was no admission in the answer tantamount to proof of the fact that A' became a childless widow during the lifetime of the plaintiff's mother (124-5).

There is a denial that the plaintiff's mother took the whole of her father's estate in consequence of N's becoming a childless widow; but no admission that at the time of the plaintiff's mother's death A' was a childless widow, incapable of taking by descent from her father. There is merely an admission by implication in the denial of the legal effect imputed to the fact alleged; and it has been repeatedly held that an admission of a fact on the pleadings by implication is not an admission for any other purpose than that of the particular issue, and is not tantamount to proof of the fact (125). #### Ambiguity in-Plea of-Privy Council appeal-Maintainability in.

-Ambiguity, if any, removed even before trial July -No application in appeal for opportunity to adduce fresh exidence on ground of ambiguity.

In a case in which the defendants complained before the Privy Council of the ambiguity in the plaint as to the title in which the plaintiff claimed the suit lands, it appeared that all doubt as to the real meaning of the plaint was set at rest when the matter came before the trial judge, that before him the real title in which the plaintiff claimed was raised, that from that time onward that aspect of the case was kept well to the front, but that the defendants never applied for an opportunity of calling further evidence of the ground that they had been originally misled by the ambiguity in the plaint.

Held that it was too late for the defendants to rely upon any alleged ambiguity in the plaint in the appeal to the Privy Council. (Lord Tomlin.) GNANENDRA KUMAR ROY CHOWDHURY P. PRAFULLA NATH THAKUR

-Judgment of trial Judge-Point sprung upon plaintiff by-Amenment of written statement to at to raise -Allowing of -Opportunity to plaintiff to meet can raised by amendment - Necessity.

The trial Judge, in the course of his consideration of his judgment, discovered a point until then unargued and unsuspected. It was in the course of his judgment sprung upon the plaintiffs, who had no chance of dealing with it. nor, from that moment, with the merits of the case. He gave judgment for the defendants. The plaintiffs, there upon, appealed; and the appellate Court, in the course of the hearing of that appeal, amended the record in favour of the defendants. No opportunity was thereafter given to the plaintiffs of dealing with the masters involved on the new basis which the amendment established.

Held that the plaintiffs should have been afforded such an opportunity.

Their Lordships accordingly set aside the judgment below and ordered a new trial, (Lord Durling.) LUIGI AM-BROSINI v. BAKARA TUIKO. (1929) 31 L. W. 12 = 122 I.C. 30 = A. I R. 1929 P. C. 306.

The plaintiff, the assignee from G of all his interest under the two kut-kobalas, instituted a suit in the court of the Sub-Judge of the 24-Pergunnahs. That suit related only to the 1st mortgage, and prayed for foreclosure. While that sult was pending, he instituted another suit in the court of the Sub-Judge of Nuddea against the defendant to recover the principal and interest under the second kut-kohale. The claim in the second suit was against the defendant person-

The two suits were dismissed by the two Sub-Judges.

On appeal from the two decrees, the High Court affirming the decree of the Nuddea Court, reversed the decree dismissing the suit in the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs. turned both suits into a contribution suit, and remanded it to the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs with directions as to the mode in which contribution should be affected.

suit, and that without consent. was beyond the power of the High Court (224-5).

Their Lordships, while fully recognising the advantages to the administration of justice of the wide powers of amendment and modification of decrees, and of framing new issues, conferred upon the High Court by Ss. 350-354 of C. P. C. of 1859, and being by no means disposed to narrow their plain meaning by judicial construction, are nevertheless of opinion that to change (as has been done in this case) two suits, one of which has been dismissed on appeal, into one suit of a totally different description from either of them, and this without consent, exceeds the power conferred by the Act (224-5). The assignee of an insolvent sued to recover a sum of money paid to one Z under a compromise consented to by the previous Official Assignce, on the ground that the payment of the said sum was fraudulently concealed by Z, from the Court, and from the then assignee. The trial Judge found that Z did not conceal from the then assignee the fact of such payment, and that the then assignee was fully aware of the fact of such payment and that he consented to the compromise will full knowledge of that fact. He also found that Z was under no duty to inform the Court and was not guilty of any improper concealment. Nevertheless, the trial judge, after the case had been closed. allowed the plaint to be amended by adding that, even if the then assignee was aware of the fact of the payment to Z, the said payment was a fraud upon the Court, which the then assignee had no power to consent to, and that such consent could not be binding upon his successor.

Held that the allowance of the amendment was contrary to every principle of justice and that it was wholly unprecedented (121). (Sir Baines Peacock.) ABDOOL HOSSEIN JENAIL ABUDIN P. TURNER.

-Prity Council appeal-Permissibility in.

The appellant sued to recover the amount due under a simple money bond executed in his favour by R. To the suit he made others persons, besides R, defendants on the allegation that they had combined with R, and colorably procured her estate to be transferred to them in order to deprive the appellant of his remedy against it; and by his plaint, he prayed for a decree against the defendants and the said property. Their Lordships held that the suit was whol'y misconceived, as the appellant's only remedy was to sue R alone for the recovery of the money due on the bond-The question arose whether the proper course was not to dismiss the appeal altogether, without prejudice to the right of the appellant to bring a new suit against R, on the suit bond, treating it as a mere money bond.

Held that, in the circumstances of the case, the proper course was to remand the cause to the court below, with directions to allow the appellant to amend his plaint so as to make it a plaint against A' alone for the recovery of the money alleged to be due to him on the bond with liberty to R to make any defence to the suit which was not inconsistent with the declaration aforesaid (4867).

Considering, however, that a new suit by the appellant on the bond against A' alone would probably be met by a plea of the Act of Limitations; that in the circumstances of this case such a defence would be inequitable; and that, R not having appeared, their Lordships are not in a condition to put her on terms as to her defence to a fresh suit; they have come to the conclusion that the fairer course is to do what the Judge of the Court of First Instance might under the Code of Procedure, have done at an earlier stage of the course, namely, allow the appellant to amend his plaint so as to make it a plaint against R alone for the recovery of money due on a bond (485 6). WRITTEN STATEMENT-AMENDMENT OF, AFTER CLOSE OF PLAINTIFF'S CASE.

-Permissibility.

In a suit brought by the plaintiffs to assert their rights as the widow and daughter, respectively, of a deceased Cutchee Memon, the detenuants, after the plaintiff's case was closed, applied for leave formally to raise the issue whether, in the event of the 1st plaintiff being entitled to maintenance from the date of the deceased's death, she had not forfeited such right by unchastity; and, on that application being refused, the defendants applied for leave to file a supplemental written statement raising the question of unchastity.

Held that both applications were rightly refused by the courts below.

It was out of the question that, after the plaintiff's case was closed, this new averment should be made, necessitating as it did the opening up of the whole case, without any suggestion that the facts relied on had newly come to the knowledge of the defendants and had before been excusably unknown to them (129). #### Defects in.

-Reversal of decree on ground of-Ne prejudice to appellant-Decree right on merits. It would be a lamentable thing if an appeal in which their Lordships are clearly of opinion that the High Court were right on the merits of the case were to be determined the other way on the ground that there was some imperfection in the pleadings. It would be lamentable in any case, and especially in India, where we know the pleadings are prepared with a considerable amount of looseness. If it could be suggested on the , art of the appellant that practical in Their Lordships do not desire to construe plaints justice had been done him by the want of particularity in the pleadings, however much their Lordships might lament it, they might be compelled to allow the appeal. But no such suggestion can be made (51). (Sir Arthur Hob

Error in—Objection based upon.

-Privy Council appeal - Maintainability in - Parties not misled.

But this mispleading (on the part of the plaintiff) has in no decree prevented the ettlement of proper issues, or prejudiced the fair trial of the real question of right between the parties; and that being the case, it would be contrary to the practice of their Lordships to give effect to nice and critical objections founded on the inaccuracy of an Indian pleading (497). ### Laxity of.

-Permissibility of.

It is most desirable that laxity of pleading should be discountenanced in cases in which the utmost precision and accuracy are necessary in order to bring the parties to distinct issues, because such laxity of pleading imposes additional difficulties in the decision of such cases (396). (Lord Chelmsford). Kamala Naicken D. PITCHAKUTTY (1865) 10 M. I. A. 386=2 Sar. 147.

In the argument before their Lordships some importance was attached by the learned Counsel for the respondents (defendants) to the manner in which the plaintiff's case was stated in the plaint, but their Lordships are of opinion that in dealing with the case they must look not to the mere wording of the plaint, but to the issue which was settled for trial, and to the manner in which the case was treated by the lower courts (155). # Signature of party in Necessity-Rule as to, in 1817 and 1819.

In a suit brought in 1893, for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage of the year 1788, the plaint in a suit of 1817 and the written statement in a suit of 1819, which asserted the title of the mortgagees as such, were relied upon as acknowledgments of the title of the plaintiff or of his right of redemption. The records of those suits had been destroyed in the Mutiny, but the mortgagor produced copies of the decrees which recited the pleadings. The Subordinate Judge considered that he was bound to presume that those pleadings were signed by the mortgagees because the law required them to do it. The High Court, however, pointed out that there was no such law then existing, that plaints might be, and were signed by the Vakils and written statements did not require any signature at all, and that there could therefore he no presumption that any such acknowledgment as the Limitation Acts of 1859 and 1871. required was given by the mortgagees. Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the High Court on this point (107). (Lord Hobbourg.) FATIMATULNISSA BEGAM v. SOONDER DAS. (1900) 27 I. A. 103 = 27 C. 1004 (1011) = 4 C. W. Larger relief-Suit for-Lesser relief.

-(See also PRACTICE - RELIEF-MONEY-SUIT FOR LARGER SUM).

-Grant in appeal of-Propriety-Conditions.

The plaintiffs, who claimed through the original grantors of the suit property to a wakf sued for possession of the same on the ground that the wakf was void and that the property reverted back to the grantors, through whom they claimed. The High Court found that the parties through whom the plaintiffs claimed had, by contracts for valuable consideration of the year 1881, relinquished all rights that would arise to them if the wakf was declared for any reason to be invalid, and that in the place of such rights they obtained the benefit of an annuity fixed in a certain manner and secured by an agreement. Court accordingly held that the plaintiff's claim for posression based on the invalidity of the wakf was unsustainable. but declared that they were entitled to a charge in respect of the annuity secured to them by the agreement of 1881.

On appeal to the Privy Council the defendants contended that the High Court erred in giving the plaintiffs the benefit of the charge upon the ground that their suit was merely for possession of the land and that they did not defnitely claim the benefit of the charge declared by the High

Held. affirming the High Court, that the right allowed by the High Court was a lesser right, and that it would be both unwise and unfair to exclude the plaintiffs from that lesser right, merely because they asked for the larger one

The real question is: Do they possess that (the lesser) right? It appears to their Lordships it is the necessary corollary of the fact that they do not possess the wider right which they claimed. The reason why they do not possess that is because they relinquished it by virtue of the agreement of 1881; and the reason why they do possess the other is because the agreement in consideration of that release granted them the charge which they now seek to have declared. In a case in which the plaintiff's claim was for Rs.25,000 on a particular footing, but their Lordships allowed only Rs.16,000 cn another hasis, they observed:-"There is nothing in the contention that the claim was not specifically made by the plaint in this suit. The plaint clearly states the circumstances under which the claim of the plaintiff arises. He cannot sustain his suit for the whole amount claimed, but there is nothing in his claim for the larger amount which deprives him of his right to recover the smaller amount, which, as the result of the facts pleated and proved, their Lordships are of opinion is equitably due to him. It can only affect costs" (353-4). SYAD LULF AU KHAN P. MUSSAMAT AFZALUNISSA BEGUM. (1871) 9 B.L.R. 348 - 16 W.R. P.C. 20 -2 Sar. 701 - 2 Suth. 459.

Their Lordships are much impressed with the importance of showing that claims of this character (a claim to preempt) which disturb a long fide purchaser in the quiet peasession of his property should not be based on untrestworthy evidence; but it must be remembered that the Legislature has conferred these rights, and that if they are to be enjoyed by people where formal records cannot be expected to exist, reliance can only be placed upon memory and tradition. of proprietary rights to vender under-Effect of. Defendants 6 to 10, being five occupancy tenants in a village, sold their occupancy rights to the first appellant, who really purchased on behalf of himself and others and subsequently formally conveyed a one-half share of his occupancy rights in the lands to those others. Subsequent to the sale, the landlords of the village (the land being communal land) objected to the same and prayed for its cancellation by reason of disconformity to the requirements of S. 53 of the Punjab Tenancy Act. Then a suit was filed on behalf of all the landlords of the village in the Court of the Assistant Collector against the appellant and his co-sharers. The plaintiffs-respondents were also parties to that suit. That suit was decreed by the Assistant Collector but was on appeal dismissed by the Collector who held the sale to be valid. A further appeal was then made to the Commissioner, and then a compromise among all the parties was effected. By virtue of that compromise, the appeal was withdrawn, and, in consideration of a sum which was applied to purposes of the community, the proprietary right in the land was sold to the defendants. The sale was sanctioned by the revenue officer, a decree made in terms of the compromise and mutation of names effected. The plaintiffs-respondents personally did not sign the compromise. They subsequently instituted the suit out of which the appeal to the Privy Council arose against the first appellant and his co-purchasers, claiming to pre-empt the sale of the occupancy rights in the lands on the ground that the co-purchasers were not sharers in the village.

Held that, whether the case was viewed under the heading of res judicata or of estoppel, or of no title and interest to sue, the result was the same, and that the plaintiffs were precluded from claiming to pre-empt the occupancy rights,

The occupancy rights have been consolidated, or rather, merged in the ownership rights; these belong to the appellants, and the respondents were themselves parties to the suit in the course of which this compromise arrangement was come to followed by the decree and mutation proceedings. The compromise is not challenged; it has neither been disclaimed nor impeached; it stands. Nor is any challenge made of the judgment which followed it; that also stands. This being so, it is beyond argument that the respondents can in this suit have no right or title to prefer a claim for pre-emption to the lands upon which the buildings were erected, a claim which, if sustained, might destroy the entire value and validity of the settlement and decree. Valuable consideration has been paid for the transaction under which the respondents' rights, including, of course, any claim of pre-emption, have disappeared,

The only argement that appears possible in these circumstances is that the respondents personally did not sign the compromise. But they were parties to the suit, and a number of apparently representative landlords did sign. Any plea founded upon that circumstance would be sufficiently answered by the authorities such as Idris v. Skinner, (54 P. R. No. 82). (Lord Share.) RIKHI RAM v. DHAN-(1928) 55 I. A. 266 = 110 I. The learned Chief Justice also apparently suggested doubts as to the value of a wajib-ul-arz as evidence of a custom of pre emption when unsupported by evidence that the custom had been enforced (20). Their Lordships fail to see on what principle statements in a wajib-ul-arz as to rights of pre-emption, which are not in contravention of Mahomedan, Hindu, or other law, should not be considered as reliable evidence of a custom of pre-emption. To hold that a wajib ul-arz is not by itself good prima facir evidence of a custom of pre-emption which is stated in it and that the wajib-ul-arz requires to be corroborated by evidence of instances in which the custom has been enforced would be to increase the costs of litigation in pre-emption cases, and in many cases might practically deprive a sharer of his right. Of coarse the evidence as to a custom of pre-emption afforded by a wajib ul are may be rebutted by other evidence (21). (Sir John Edgs.) DIGAMBAR SINGH, P. AHMED SAID KHAN. (1914) 42 I. A. 10 =

Where the High Court held that a village custom which referred only to a voluntary sale by one eo-sharer of his property was inapplicable to the case of an involuntary sale by the official assignee in whom the property had vested under S. 16 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, Actd that the High Court was wrong, because its view overlooked one of the fundamental principles of all arrangements for the realization and distribution of a bankrupt's property (210).

The property the official assignee takes is the property of the bankrupt exactly as it stood in his person, with all its advantages and all its burdens. After all, in a custom of pre-emption there is, so to speak, a debtor and creditor side; the debtor side is the obligation of the holder of the share to offer it to a co-sharer; the creditor side is the right of the co-sharer to buy. The property, if fettered. would be presumably somewhat less valuable than if it were free. But if the view of the learned judges were right, the bankruptcy of A would have the double effect of forfeiting something belonging to B, and of rendering the property of A more valuable in the hands of his official assignee than it was in his own. Just as if the conveyance had been made to an individual, that individual would have had at once the disadvantage and the privilege of the custom of pre-emption so the official assignee was in the same position and could only sell what he got (210). #### UNPARTITIONED MAUZA-CUSTOM IN Survival of, after partition of manta into uparate mahats—Proof of Necessity.

Mauza Pala Kher, which was an unpartitioned mauza in which the appellant and one B were sharers, was, in 1905, on the application of certain of the then sharers in the mauza, partitioned into five mahals. On the partition each of the five newly formed mahals became separately responsible for the revenue assessed upon it, but did not become responsible for the revenue assessed upon any other of the five mahals. No separate record of rights was framed for any of the five new mahals. In 1863 all the sharers in the mauza were apparently Mahomedans.

B, who was a sharer in one of the newly formed mahals, sold part of the share to the respondent, who, at the date of the sale, was not a sharer in any of the five new mahals, but was the mortgagee in possession of part of the share of B. The appellant was not, at the date of the said sale, a sharer in the mahal in which B was a sharer, but was, however, at that date a sharer in another of the five new mahals, in which mahal neither the respondent nor B was a sharer. The appellant and B were not related to each other. The respondent, who was a Mahomedan, was not related to the appellant or to B.

The appellant brought a suit to enforce a right of preemption in respect of the sale by B to the respondent, claiming to be entitled under a custom which he alleged to be prevailing in mauza Pala Kher. The only evidence to prove that the custom, which was relied upon by the appellant, existed in the said mauza was afforded by the clauses relating to pre-emption which were contained in the wajbul-arz of 1863 and 1870. Those clauses did prove that prior to the partition of the mauza the custom of pre-emption existed and was in force in the mauza.

Held that proof of a custom of pre-emption existing and in force in the mauza prior to the partition thereof would not be sufficient to entitle the appellant to a decree; but that it was necessary for him to show, either on the construction of the wajib-ul-arz or by other evidence, that the custom of pre-emption which obtained in the unpartitioned mauza would survive a partition of that mauza into separate mahals so as to give a sharer in one of the new mahals a right to pre-empt property in another of those mahals in which he was not a sharer at the date of the sale (19).

Pre-emption in village communities in British India had its origin in the Mahomedan law as to pre-emption, and was apparently unknown in India before the time of the Moghul rulers. In the course of time customs of pre-emption grew up or were adopted among village communities. In some of the Mahomedan law of pre-emption, and in such cases the custom of the village follows the rules of the Maliomedan law of pre-emption. In other cases, where a custom of preemption exists, each village community has a custom of pre-emption which varies from the Mahomedan law of preemption and is peculiar to the village in its provisions and its incidents. A custom of pre-emption was doubtless in all cases the result of agreement among the shareholders of the particular village, and may have been adopted in modern times and in villages which were first constituted in modern times. Rights of pre-emption have in some provinces been given by Acts of the Indian Legislature. Rights of preemption have also been created by contract between the sharers in a village. But in all cases the object is as far as is possible to prevent strangers to a village from becoming sharers in the village (18). (Sir John Edge.) DIGAMBAR SINGH : AHMAD SAID KHAN. (1914) 42 I. In a suit by the plaintiff to establish her right of preconction in respect of certain undivided shares in a number of villages comprised in a mahal, it was urged that the claim to coparcenary, on which the plaintiffs' right of pre-emption was based arose out of the fact that the vendor and precomptor were jointly liable for the payment of the Government revenue assessed on the villages comprised in the mahal and that that joint liability did not constitute the co-parcenary contemplated by the Mahomedan law. Held, that the argument proceeded on a misconception of the land system of India and that the said joint liability was sufficient evidence of co-parcenary to found a claim to pre-empt (108.9), — Recognition of purchaser's title operating as - Mortgage on property in pre-emptor's favour—Deposit of money due under, by purchaser with a view to redeem—With drawal of money by pre-emptor—Effect.

The suit was to enforce a right of pre-emption in respect of a four-annas share in certain property. The plaintiff had obtained a transfer of a zurpeshgi mortgage binding the four annas share. After the sale of the said share the purchaser paid the mortgage money into Court, in accordance with the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act, for the purpose of redeeming the mortgage, and the plaintiff took out that money.

Held that the plaintiff had not, by doing so, recognised the title of the purchaser, and was not precluded from claiming pre-emption.

Until a decree for pre-emption was made the purchaser owned the land as purchaser, and had a right to redeem. The taking out of the money by the plaintiff, as mortgages, was no recognition of anything more than that and was quite consistent with the claim to pre-empt. (Sir Jethur Wilson.) #### FORMALITIES FOR EXERCISE OF.

Of the formalities insisted upon by the Mussalman law as essential preliminaries to the assertion of the right of pre-emption, the first, technically called "the immediate demand," should be observed by the pre-emptor or some one on his behalf immediately on receipt of the news of the sale; otherwise the right of pre-emption falls to the ground. The second formality consists in the repetition of the "demand" with as little delay as possible under the circumstances, in the presence of witnesses either before the vendor or the vendee or on the premises (108). A and B were co-sharers in two villages. On 14-10-1908 B executed in favour of the appellants, who were Hindus, a Actual sale of property pure and simple by private salethe appellants had agreed to purchase B's share in the two villages, that they had paid a portion of the consideration for the sale, and undertook to pay the remainder in two instalments, and that there was to be a "pukka" registered deed of sale. The deed further recited that, if A was willing to purchase the said share, B should immediately return to the appellants the amount received by him. Contemporaneoasly with that deed B wrote a letter to A stating that he had that day sold his share to the appellants for the sum of Rs. 29,999, and that, if he (A) was destrous of purchasing the said share for the said sum, he should send B a cheque for the said sum, within 2 days of his receipt of that letter. On receipt of that letter, A taking the view that there had been a sale, went through the ceremonies necessary for asserting his right.

Held, affirming the High Court, that, as the parties represented a full sale as having taken place on 14-10-1908. the date of the agreement, A was justified in proceeding at once to the ceremonies, and in treating that as the crucial time. Pre-emption in a share in a village was claimed by a cosharer as against the buyer from the assignee in bankruptcy of another co-sharer. The Official Assignee put up the property for sale by public auction on 8-11-1914. A bid was made but was not accepted by the Official Assignee, and the sale was re-advertised for 6 12-1914. A bid of Rs. 40,000 was made by one S, and he was declared purchaser, subject to confirmation by the Official Assignee. On the next day the auctioneer received a private offer of a greater amount. The property was thereupon sold privately for Rs. 41,000 to a person against whose representatives the right of pre-emption was claimed. It appeared that what was put up at the auction was not the property pure and simple, but the property plus arrears of rent all in one lot, so that the only sole of the property pure and simple was the private sale for Rs. 41,000, of which, admittedly the plaintiff, the person claiming the right of pre-emption had

The question was whether, upon the construction of a wajib-ul-arz, the plaintiff-appellant was entitled to a right of pre-emption in the defendant's thoke. The words of the wajib-ul-arz were:—"Each sharer is by all means at liberty to transfer his right and share, but first of all the transfer should be effected by him in favour of his own brothers and nephews, who may be sharers, and, in case of their refusal, in favour of the other owners of the thoke."

Mauza T was divided into three thokes, one of which belonged to I, one of the defendants, a second to the appellant, and the third to a peuson not interested in the suit. Besides the land in the thokes, there were the undivided lands of the mauza, held in common by the sharers of the different thokes, proportionately to their shares in the mauza. The record-of-rights showed the divided land comprising each thoke, and the common land as outside the thokes.

I sold all his interest in the divided as well as the undivided lands of mauza T to the predecessor-in-interest of the respondents, whereupon the appellant sued to establish her right to pre-emption with regard to the third share of mauza T sold by I.

Held, on a construction of the wajib-ul-arz, that the appellant was not entitled to the right of pre-emption.

The wajib-ul-arz confers a right of pre-emption not up. on "the other owners or shareholders of the village," but upon 'the other owners of the thoke." Now whether the thok comprised the divided lands which were recorded as belonging to I alone, or included the undivided lands which were appurtenant to those divided lands, the plaintiff was no co-owner with 1. She was not a joint tenant, nor a tenant-in-common with him as to the divided portion of the lands; if she were a tenant-in-common of the undivided lands, that did not make her an owner of I's share in those lands. The plaintiff was not therefore an owner of the thoke which was sold. The right of pre-emption is in favour of the tenant's own brothers and nephews. If they and the owner of the share were a joint undivided family, the brothers or nephews would be co-owners and sharers; there might also be other owners of the share with them. In such case, if the sharer wished to sell his share, his own brothers or nephews, in the first instance, and in case of their refusal the other co-owners, would be entitled to the right of pre-emption. In this case the plaintiff was not an owner or shareholder in the share sold, nor had she any interest in it. (Sir Barnes Peacock.) MUSSAMUT LACHHO (1882) 10 I.A. 1=5 A. 158= P. MAVA RAM. 4 Sar. 407.

Wajib-ul-arz-Entry in. relating to pre-emption.

Construction of Mortgagees Pre-emption right of, as sharers in mouzah.

A wajib-ul-arz of 1863 provided as follows:—"In future every co-sharer mortgagor or mortgagee shall as such be at liberty to make transfers. But he shall make transfers first in favour of his own and ekjaddi brothers and after them in favour of the proprietors of the village. If none of them take he shall be competent to make transfers in favour of strangers. If there is a dispute regarding difference in consideration it shall be decided by arbitration. This wajib-ul-arz was signed by all the sharers and by some, if not all, of the mortgagees.

The corresponding clause in the wajib-ul-arz of 1870 was as follows:—" In future co-sharer mortgagor or mortgagoe has as such power. He shall have power to make transfers first to his own and ekjaddi brothers and next to co-sharers in the khata and patti as well as to proprietors. If none of the aforesaid persons takes he shall have power to transfer it to a stranger. If there arises any dispute as regards the price being more or less it shall be decided by arbitration."

Held that it was not meant by the clauses above set out to treat mortgagees as such as sharers in the mauza and to confer on them a right to pre-empt (16-7).

The references in the clauses above mentioned to mortgagors and mortgagees are obscure. The sharers in the manza may have intended that if a mortgagor should assign his interest as a mortgagor he should offer it in the first instance to his own or his ekjaddi brother and them to a sharer in the khata and patti, or to a proprietor in the manzah, and if they should refuse to porchase it he might assign it to a stranger, and in the same way if a mortgagee should wish to assign his mortgagee's interest his right to assign it should be similarly limited (16). Record of custom or contract coming to an end with previous settlement.

In a suit brought to establish a right of pre-emption, plaintiff's claim was based on the wajib-ul-arz of the mahals within which the suit lands were situated. The meterial part of the document was to be found in paragraph 14. Chapter II which was headed thus:—"Mutual rights of the co-sharers, based on custom or particular contracts." Paragraph 14 was headed "custom relating to the right of pre-emption;" and the clause gave a right of pre-emption first to a near co-sharer, then to a co-sharer in the patti, after that to a co-sharer in the thoke, and lastly to a co-sharer in the mahal. Held that the terms of the wajib-ul-arz were absolutely clear regarding the existence of the custom of pre-emption in the mahals to which it related.

The words "particular contracts" in the heading of Chapter II of the wajib-ul-arz seem to have suggested the ingenious plea that paragraph 14 gave expression to a "contract" between the co-sharers which came to an end with the last settlement. The Subordinate Judge upheld that plea, but the High Court overruied it, and the objection has not been seriously pressed before this Board. (Mr. Amer Ali') MATHURA PRASAD 2. Share-holder of Bank—Inspection of register of share-holders and taking of copies and extracts therefrom— Kight of, absolute or qualified—Suit to establish absolute reght—Decree in, establishing qualified right—Propriety.

The respondent was a holder of one share in the Bank of Bombay, one of the Banks incorporated in 1876 by the Presidency Banks Act, 1870. He sued the Bank for a declaration that he was entitled at all reasonable times to inspect the register of share-holders of the Bank and copy and take extracts from the said register and for an order that the Bank do give him such inspection and allow such copies and extracts.

The High Court, by its decree, declared expressly that the respondent, as long as he was a share-holder of the Bank, was entitled at all reasonable times to inspect the register of share-holders of the Bank, and to copy and take extracts from the said register, and then proceeded to order that the Bank do give such inspection and do allow the respondent, as long as he was a share-holder of the Bank, to take copies and extracts from the register, and then restrained the Bank from preventing the respondent, as long as he was a share-holder of the Bank, from having access at all reasonable times to the register for the purpose of inspection and perusal, and from preventing the respondent, as long as he was a share-holder of the Bank, from taking copies of and extracts from the register.

There was no statute conferring on the members of the Bank, a right to inspect, copy, or take extracts from, the register of its share-holders or any other document belonging to it. The only right the respondent could have, therefore, against the Bank in reference to such matters, was that which at common law belonged to every member of a Corporation. On the evidence in the case it was clear that the respondent had no special interest in any of the matters he complained of, or any interest other than, or different from, that of each member of the corporation, and that he had no definite right or object of his own to aid or serve in asking for inspection of the register, or right or object which the register would illustrate; but that, on the contrary, his object was to obtain the inspection in order to communicate with the share-holders with the view of securing their help in bringing about an improvement in the administration of the Corporation's affairs.

Held that the respondent was not in law entitled to the extended right to which the decree of the High Court declared him to be entitled, and that he was not also entitled to a limited and qualified right, as it was never put forward or insisted on, before action brought, or any claim based on it ever refused. Assignce. It may be that under the provisions of S. 52 of | lender for the purposes of immorality. Their Lordships do that Act or in some other way that property may in a proper case be made available for payment of the father's just debts; but it is quite a different thing to say that by virtue of his insolvency alone it vests in the Assignee, and no such provision should be read into the Act (39).

It is true that S. 17 of the Act of 1909 provides that on the making of an order of adjudication "the property of the insolvent "shall vest in the Official Assignee and shall become divisible among his creditors, and that by S. 2 "property" is defined as including any property over which any person has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit; and it may be said that a Hindu father's power to sell the joint property and apply the proceeds to the payment of his debts is such a power. But the definitions in S. 2 are only to apply "unless there is something repugnant in the subject or context; and it is therefore necessary to consider the effect of the definition of "property" contained in that section in relation to the subject matter which is being dealt with and the other sections of the Act. Now, as to the subject-matter-namely, the joint property of an undivided Hindu family-it is certainly a startling proposition that the insolvency of one member of the family should of itself and immediately take from the other male members of the family their interests in the joint property and from the female members their right to maintenance and transfer the whole estate to an assignee of the insolvent for the benefit of his creditors. The father's power to dispose of the joint property is not absolute, but conditional on his having debts which are liable to be satisfied out of that property; and S. 2 seems to contemplate an absolute and unconditional power of disposal. And if the later sections of the Act (Ss. 52, 23, 76) are examined, it becomes apparent that this cannot have been the intention of the statute (37-8). (Sir John Edge.) SAT NARAIN v. BEHARI LAL. The question what is the right or interest which an Official Assignee acquires under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act III of 1909 in the joint and unpartitioned immovable property of a Hindu joint family governed by the law of the Mittakshara on, and solely by virtue of, an adjudication by a High Court that one of the co-parceners of the joint property is insolvent must be decided on the wording of that Act, and on that Act alone. Cases which have arisen under S. 266 of C. P. C. of 1882, or under S. 60 of C.P.C. of 1908, depended on different considerations, and decisions in cases under those sections are likely to mislead a court which has to construe the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, 1909. A sale under S. 266 of C. P. C. of 1882, or under S. 60 of C. P. C. of 1908, is a sale by a Court in execution of a decree which until the contrary is shown can be executed against the property which has been attached. When the decree which was executed was made in a suit to which the sons were not parties and the property sold was the joint property of the father and the son, the sale was good on the principle of Hindu Law that it is the pious duty of a Hindu son to pay his father's debts unless it is shown that the debt in respect of which the decree was made was contracted by the father to the knowledge of the

If a joint Hindu family governed by the law of the Mithakshara could be treated as a firm carrying on its business in partnership an order adjudicating the father who managed the business or even an order adjudging the firm insolvent could not be made under the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act III of 1909 even if the firm consisted solely of a Hindu father and his two minor sons, which would affect the interests of a minor who happened to be a partner in the firm (27). Under S. 22 of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, the High Court has power to stop insolvency proceedings in that Court, and to say it is more convenient that insolvency proceedings against the same debtor commenced previously in a District Court should go on there. Where owing to some suspicion that the proceedings in the District Court were not proceedings which were in the best interest of the creditors, and acting on the view that it was better that the jurisdiction should be exercised by the High Court, the learned Judge exercising the Insolvency Jurisdiction in the High Court, however, held that the proceedings before him should go on unhampered by the proceedings in the District Court and his decision was confirmed on appeal. held that the matter was one entirely in the discretion of the Courts below, and that under the circumstances of the case, that discretion ought not to be interfered with. Questions to be considered under.

In substance the question under Cl. (e) of S. 4, sub-S. 1, of the Press Act. 1910, comes to this: are the passages such as in fact to excite, or do they disclose an attempt (which implies intention) to excite hatred, contempt, or disaffection towards the Government or of any class or section of His Majesty's subjects in India? And in judging the question of intent the publisher must be deemed to intend that which is the natural result of the words used having regard, among other things, to the character and de-cription of that part of the public who are to be expected to read the articles. Scope and effect of-Comparison and contrast.

The balancing of important political considerations which is effected by adding Explanation II to the enacting words tound in the earlier part of S. 4, sub-S. (1) of the Indian Press Act, 1910, has its analogy in Ss, 124-A and 153-A of the Penal Code. The language is not precisely the same but there is the same delicate balancing of two important public considerations; the undesirability of anything tending to excite sedition or to excite strife between classes and the undesirability of preventing any bona fide argument for reform. In applying these balancing principles it is inevitable that different minds may come to different results, one mind attaching more weight to the consideration of freedom of argument, and the other to the preservation of law and order or of harmony. LIABILITY ON-DISPROOF OF.

-Items claimed against agent appearing in accounts of another agent -Disproof by -Condition.

In a suit for an account by a principal against his dewan or agent, held that the fact that some of the items appearing in the accounts of the defendant also appeared in the accounts between the plaintiff and another agent of his did not show that the plaintiff was claiming those sums against both. To show that, it would be necessary to go deeper into the accounts, and to find that the plaintiff is trying to get the benefit of the same charge twice over by writing it off against a different set of discharges in each case (131). The respondent acted as the mookhtar and cashier of the appellant from 23-6-1877, until 10-5-1885, when he resigned

In March, 1886, the appellant sued for a general at counting from the date of the respondent's appointment in 1877, until 10.5-1885. The respondent pleaded that the appellant's demand for an accounting for the period antecedent to 10-4 1884, was excluded by a release of that date executed by the appellant in favour of the respondent whereby the respondent was exonerated from all liability in respect of all that he had done, and all matters connected with moneys realised and expended from the date of his the defendant from claiming the benefit of an account if in appointment as mokhtar and cashier until 10.4-1884. appellant, on the other hand, relied upon an ikrar executed on 8-5-1885 by the respondent in his favour in which the respondent stated that there had been no examination or adjustment of his accounts, and professed his willingness to render an account from the day of appointment up to date.

The Courts below concurrently found that the release of 22-4-1884 was a genuine document, that it had been preceded by a detailed examination of the respondent's accounts; and that the respondent had used no unfair means to obtain it.

On appeal it was contended for the appell-ut that as matter of law, the cours was upon the respondent of explaining the circumstances in which he executed the intar of 8-5-1885, and that he had failed to discharge it.

Suit amounting to a Sait alleging continued agency in defendant for descring and expending plaintel's money and praying for relief on the ground that defendant had overdrawn if a.

Plaintiff appellant was the owner of a large estate, and the defendant acted as his dewan for some twenty years or so. Some months before the institution of the suit out of which the appeal arose, the plaintiff demanded an account of the defendant's dealings, but the defendant left the place without rendering any. Therespon the plaintiff filed the suit. After stating the defendant's position and duties as dewan, the plaintiff alleged that he had taken money out of the treasury in the year 1866, and at other times, and had misappropriated it. He then specified certain sums taken, and certain allowances to which the defendant waentitled, and concluded thus: - "There is a holance against him of Re. 19,925-14 for the recovery of which I institute this suit. If by the decision of the Court a orger sure should be proved to be payable to me by him under proofand papers, the prayer is also for recovery of the same.

Held that the suit was virtually one for an account (127). Their Lordship: think that, though the pleading may not be quite precise or technical, it is impossible to assign any other character to a plaint afleging a continued agency in the defendant for the purpose of drawing and expending the plaintiff's money, and praying relief on the ground that the agent had drawn from his principal more than he had expended for him (127). ### HOLDING OUT OF.

-Principal's liability on ground of.

In order that the principle of "holding out " should, in any given case of agency apply, the act done by the agent, and relied upon to bind the principal, must be an act of that particular class of acts, which the agent is held out as having a general authority on behalf of the principal to do; and, of course, the party prejudiced must have believed in the existence of that general authority and been thereby misled. In other words, if the agent he held out as having only a limited authority to do on behalf of his principal acts of a particular class, then the principal is not bound by an eet done outside that authority even though it be an act of that particular class, because, the authority being thus represented to be limited, the party prejudiced has notice, and should ascertain whether or not the act is authorised (387.8). The doctrine of "hel ing out" is quite inapplicable to a case in which the agent's authority is to the knowledge of the person dealing with him, limited (389). (Lord Atkinson.) RUSSO CHINESE BANK D. In a case in which a debtor was held liable for such sums advanced or paid to his manager as the latter would have been justified in borrowing in course of a prudent management of the debtor's estate, the question was whether a sum of Rs. 2120 borrowed by the manager on a promissory note signed by himself had been borrowed in the interest of the debtor's estate, or in the course of a reasonable management thereof. 6 Sar 93. -Principal's liability for-Decree declaring-Claim under, in respect of money advanced to agent and applied by him in payment of Government revenue-Onus of proof on creditor.

In a suit by A, a creditor, against B, his debtor, for payment of certain sums which were stated to be vouched by a number of different securities, their Lordships found that, though there was no direct evidence in the record of a conspiracy between A & W, B's manager, they (A & W) acted together against the interest of B. They observed: "His"  $(A^{r}i)$ " agent induced him" (W)" to sign a number of bonds for sums of money which have been found not to be necessary for the purposes of the estate; and A, whose duty as a relative, a friend, and a neighbour of B, a man of weak intellect, was to have warned B against the proceedings which were going on to his own ruin, so far from doing this, acts in concert with the unfaithful steward, and not only does he act in concert with him. but he profits principally by their joint transactions."

Taking that view of the relation between the parties, their Lordships made a remit to the court below to take, inter alia, the following account :- " An account of such sums advanced or paid by A by way of consideration for the deed of 26th of May, 1879, as W would have been justified in borrowing in course of a prudent management of B's estate."

The first item claimed under this branch of the remit was a sum of Rs. 6,000, borrowed on 22-1877. The facts stated about it were that a registered bond was executed by Win favour of the servants of d, and that the consideration for it was received by W before the Sub-Registrar. Out of the sum of Rs. 6,000, a sum of Rs. 4221-7-9 was applied in payment of Government revenue in connection with the estate of B. The question was whether, upon the facts admittedly proved, the plaintiff was entitled to credit for between their firm and the defendant, as commission agents, that item. The facts proved were: the money was not paid to B himself, but was paid to IV; it was shewn that to the extent of Rs. 4,221 that money was applied in payment of Government resenue in connection with the estate. There was, however, no evidence whatever as to the necessity for resorting to borrowing money for payment of revenue, or as to any state of facts that could justify that, so as to make it a loan obtained in the course of a prudent management of the estate. So far from there being evidence of that kind, there was a great deal to show the contrary, It was shown that II' was an imprudent and dishonest manager, and that he had been wasting the money of the estate in supporting a horde of relations, friends, and dependants, from the income of his master's property.

Held, upon the item of account in question, that the mere circumstance that the money in part found its way in payment of Government sevenue was no proof that there was a necessity for its so being used, or that that was done in the course of a prudent management (36-7).

It must be assumed that a manager having the whole rents of an estate to deal with would have the means of at least meeting the necessary payments of Government revenue, and if that presumption is to be met the creditor must bring proof to overcome it (36). A person who works for and receives a commission owes a duty. If he arts as agent for both parties to a transaction of exchange or sale, airl is known to be so arting by one of the parties to the transaction, he cannot be expected to attempt to get the best bargain possible for that party ain the case of an agent acting for that party only. But he can be expected to give information as to value, and in giving that information he is bound to be straightforward and not be negligent in making himself accurately acquaint ed with the facts before he gives it (100). ## Commission payable to—Profits as shown in employer's books - Percentage on -Provision for.

Statement as to profits and losses in employer's books-Binding nature of.

The appellant sued to recover a balance of commission alleged to be due to him under an agreement between him elf and the respondents, his former employers. The question was one of construction of the agreement, and the words thereof which were chiefly material were as follows:-

"1918.9 Accounts :- You will receive a sam equivalent to 5 per cent, of the net profits (as shown in the books) of the Bombay Branch of the Bombay Co. Ltd. as accruing from the sales of all goods for which you were salesman, whether on purchase or Joint account.

In addition to this . . . you will be credited with a further sum equivalent to 5 p. c. of the net profits as shown in the books of the Bombay Branch . . . as having accrued from the sale of all goods sold on joint account and for which you were salesman during the years 1916-7, 1917-8.

1019-20 Accounts : - As regards other goods sold by you prior to 7-2 1920, the results of which have not been inclu ded in our closed accounts up to 31.7 1919, you will be given renuneration on the same basis detailed above. total sum due to you will be priel to you as soon as the ner profit is ascertained, and you will be asked to give as a final receipt in full settlement of all claims whatever against us."

Held that, on the true construction of the agreement, the books of the defendants were the arbiter of the plaintiff's rights, that he was bound by the statement of profits and losses therein, and that the profits "shown" meaning of the agreement were only profits, which from time to time were, or, in the ordinary course of basiness would be, shown.

What are "the books" within the meaning of the agree ment? A firm's books come into existence and are kept not for the purposes of a mere statistical record of transactions and payments or of prices and rates. They are essentially a statement in figures of the firm's business as a whole, so shaped as to bring out the precise results of all transactionin rights and obligations and in profits and losses, and the pr neiples, on which they set off one set of figures against another and attribute and distribute the results, are as no written statement of them is anywhere set out. A plaintiff, who accepts the defendant's books as deciding his rights to some extent, accepts them to that extent (unless he guard's himself by apt words) as statements of the right mode of distributing the results of the recorded transactions, and not as a mere repository of figures like a calendar or a price list The main object of the bookkeeping was to determine and show the trading position and results of the company, though a minor and incidental object served was to show what it owed the appellant for commission. On the terms of the agreement the books cannot be divorced from the system of bookkeeping of which they are the expression, and it cannot be said that nothing is intended to be decisive except figures picked out here and there from particular folios. The thing on which the percentage is to be recketed is the profit of the branch as shown, and in showing a profit the mode of getting at it is as relevant as the final figure. The circumstance that the appell int's ledger account had not been made cannot alter the rights of the parties. To lay stress on the word "shown" as meaning "now shown" or "shown when the respondents' servants have been told to show them", is to defeat the efficacy of the contract. The agreement refers to profits "shown as accruing" in the book, not to profits which the books do not and never will show as accruing though by a combination of selected book entries and of argument upon them they may be represented as profits, which ought to have been shown as accruire (Viscount Sumner.) -Suit for damages for breach of contract.

The suit was to recover damages, resulting from the resile of goods, alleged to have been sold by the plaintiff to the defendant, and the delivery of which had been, as #25 alleged, improperly refused by the defendants.

The plaintiffs' case was that the defendants, through broker, named R. agreed to purchase from him 20 cases of saries for a stated sum, and subsequently refused to accept delivery of, or pay for, such goods and entirely repudiated the alleged contract. There was no dispute that, or the date alleged, the said broker did purport to purchase those goods from the plaintiff, on behalf of the defendant and much part of the books as the figures themselves, though broker, as being on behalf of the defendant, in the plaintiff.

broker had any authority from him to enter into such a contract, and the question to be determined was purely one of fact, viz., "had he or had he not such authority?"

Held, reversing the appellate Court, that it was the duty of the plaintiff to prove the contract, which necessitated proof of authority given to the broker, and that even if the evidence upon that point of the defendant and the broker were eliminated, there was still an utter absence of evidence of any authority, on the part of the broker, to enter into the contract (312). The suit was to recover damages alleged to have been sustained by the plaintiff by reason of the wrongful act of the defendant in causing his (plaintiff's) agent, D, while under illegal duress and restraint, to enter into a rertain agreement, whereby he gave up, in return for 152 logs of timber, which the defendant purported thereby to sell to D, four elephants and their harness together with a certain sum belonging to the plaintiff.

Held that the plaintiff was entitled to recover as damages the money paid, and the value of the elephants delivered, under the agreement, lees the value of the defendant's timber, of which the plaintiff obtained or might have obtained possession (67-8). DURESS-CONTRACT WHEN UNDER-(Contd.)

The question was whether the contract had not been concontract book. The defendant, however, denied that the firmed and ratified by the subsequent acts of the plaintiff, or D as his agent.

Held that there was no evidence of such a ratification

The delivery of the elephants was in effect made before the constraint or the apprehension of constraint had disappeared; for simultaneously with entering into this agreement, it appears that D gave an order to the man who had the custody of the elephants to give them up to the defendant, and although the actual delivery did not take place immediately, it was made in consequence of that order, and D says he was in such a state of apprehension that he could do nothing afterwards, and as soon as he recovered from his beating, went down to Moulmein, point is that the timber was accepted by the plaintiff. But their Lordships think that it was not accepted under such incumstances as constitute a ratification, because, all the way through, D was protesting against this agreement, and so was the plaintiff, claiming the finiter as his own property (66.7). The suit was to recover the amount due under a mortgage executed by M by sale of the mortgaged properties.

The suit was instituted against M and the then mohunt of an asthal. It was found that the mortgaged properties belonged to the asthal, and not to M. that M had no right to mortgage them, and that the mortgage was not binding on them. A portion of the amount of the suit mortgage was applied to discharge a prior mortgage by M in favour of L.

The mortgage to L was executed by M under circumstances which would make it binding upon the asthal and the mohunts thereof. A portion of the amount raised by L's mortgage was applied in purchasing four small properties which were, in a suit between the mohunt and M, held to be the property of the asthal, because they were purchased with money raised by the mortgage to L. The plaintiff contended that he was entitled to recover at least the amount of L's mortgage applied in the purchase of the four properties.

Those four properties were not included in the mortgage to the plaintiff, nor were they included in the plaintiffs suit. L's mortgage was not kept alive and transferred to the plaintiff as a security for his loan under the suit mortgage.

The question was whether a certain sum of money advanced by a creditor of B was paid to B personally or to W, his manager. It would be contrary to equity to allow a man who steps in and assumes the character of a principal agent, and deposes another who was really acting as agent, afterwards to turn round and say, I purchased the estate, not for the principal, but for myself, and to obtain a profit out of the estate he had so purchased (161-2).

The question was whether an execution purchase made by C, the predecessor in interest of the plaintiffs, was made by him on his own account, or as benameedar for the appellant, his principal.

It appeared that C had been the manager of the appellant for sometime before the sale in question; that at the sale the highest bid was made by R, who was an agent of the app-llant and who in making the bid acted as u + a yent; that, though C had no express instructions previous to the sale from the appellant to purchase for him. C took the bidding out of R's hands and raised the bidding by the paltry sum of Rs. 2, professing to act for the appellant; that R would not have desisted from raising the bid but for C's representation that he acted on behalf of the appellant; and that the purchase would not have been allowed to be made by C, but for such representation.

Held, that C and the plaintiffs were, under the circumstances, therefore precluded from pleading that the purchase

The respondents were del credere agents in respect of those transactions and were also required to make deposits of money with Arbuthnot & Co. The course of business between 1901 and 1906, when Arbuthnot & Co. became insolvent was this: that the respondents sold the sugar and received the proceeds, for which they were answerable, and Arbuthnot & Co. had deposits of considerable sums from the respondents, which were security for such amounts as were due from them.

-Missenduct of Loss arising from - Liability for-Agreement providing for-Forgery by such agent-Loss due to -Liability for.

The basis of the suit out of which the appeal arose was an agreement which was entered into on 11-t-1869, between A and the Government of India on the occasion of A being appointed sudder treasurer in the district of Lucknow. The material words on which the claim was founded were:-Should any loss or deficiency arise from non-production of accounts, or by misconduct, or negligence of myself, of my temporary substitute, or of agents appointed by me, or on my nomination. I hold myself responsible to make good such loss,"

There were extensive forgeries of stamps by subordinate officers of the treasury of Lucknow. A himself was perfeetly innocent. But it was sought to make him hable by reason of the misconduct of his subordinates, and particularly of H, who was first the accountant, and then the darogals of stamps in the treasury of Lucknow. The course of proceeding by those who committed the forgeries was as follows: H received out of the treasury stamps for sale, according as he indented upon the treasury for them. He did not sell them himself, or ought not to have sold them himself, direct to the purchasers, but distributed them to certain persons who were licensed vendors of stamps, who dealt directly with the public, received the money from the public, and whose duty it was to pay that money over to the treasury. In some cases the purchasers paid direct to the treasuary, but either from the purchasers or from the vendors the treasury ought to get the whole value of the stamps issued by it to H. There were daily accounts stated between the treasury and the vendors, but between the creasury and II, the accounts were stated monthly, and, at the end of every month it was necessary to show that the money received by the treasury was the exact value of the stamps which had hen issued, excepting such as were not then sold and were accounted for as not sold. H colluded with the licensed vendors. They caused stamps to be forged either by making entirely new ones, or by altering some genuine stamps to larger amounts. The vendors sold those forged stamps, and they paid the whole of the proceeds into the treasury. Then # having got real stamps from the treasury, took for himself and his accomplices so many as were exactly equivalent to the payments made into the treasury. He accounted every month, so adjusting his accounts as to make the proceeds paid into the treasury for the forged stamps by the licensed vendors exactly square with the value of the stamps issued by the treasury to him, excepting so far as the same remained unsold. This process went on for more than five years. Then it was discovered, and the forgers were convicted and punished.

The suit claim against M was for the value of the stamps thus misappropriated, and it was based on the two grounds (1) of the misappropriation of the stamps by //, and (2) of the misconduct of H by falsifying his accounts and so causing loss to the Government.

If was employed in the treasury from the year 1859 onwards, and was up to the year 1873 admittedly the agent of M. But in the year 1873 the Government appointed take the benefit of these sums subject to every equity which | H to a definite office, that of accountant in the treasury, and instead of .V paying him as before, thenceforward the Government paid him. It was, however, proved that J nominated II, and that the change which took place in 1873 was not such as practically to after the relations between M and H, considering them as principal and subordinate.

Held, athroning the Courts below, that H was the agent of M that, although the forgery committed by H would not be misconduct on his part within the agreement so as to make M liable for it, in two respects there was misconduct which was directly connected with the agency of H within the agreement, that is to say, the misappropriation of the stamps which he represented to have been sold, and the false accounts which he rendered month by month, and in which he represented those stamps to have been sold by the vendors, that the loss caused to the Government arose in consequence of that misconduct of H within the meaning of the agreement, and that M was liable for the same. Appellants appointed V as their exclusive agent for the sale of kerosine oil on the terms, amongst others, that he should deposit with them a certain amount as a guarantee of good faith and should deposit securities for the price of the oil to be supplied to him. Appellants did not expressly or impliedly authorise V to name any person to act for them. V, however, entered into a number of sub-agency agreements with appellants. The agreements were entitled sub-agency agreement; but, except so far as V was referred to as being the sole agent for the appellants, no reference whatever was made to them in the agreements, and no privity whatever was established between the appellants and the sub-agents. The course of business between V and the appellants did not also necessarily imply that the parties must be assumed to contemplate the employment of such sub-agents. V did not appoint them to act on behalf of the appellants but on behalf of himself and the guarantee and deposited moneys were to secure him as against the sub-agents, and not for the security of the appellants. V. who was indebted to the respondent Bank, paid to it a sum of Rs. 52,000 from out of moneys provided by the sub-agents. Soon after the Bank suspended payment, and appellants instituted proceedings out of which the appeal before their Lordships arose claiming repayment of the sum paid by V in priority to other creditors of the bank on the ground that such sum represented their money in V's hands. Held, overruling their plea, that the amount was never the appellant's money at all and that, in the circumstance of the case, S. 194 of the Contract Act did not avail them. (Lord Buckmaster.) The position of the parties is not different after the order for the amendment of the plaint from what it would have been if the suit had been originally commenced by S in the name of N. #### Wrongful acts of.

Principal's liability for.

The suit was to recover damages in respect of the injury which the plaintiff had sustained by being prevented by D, the agent of the defendants, in August or September, 1865, from removing certain logs of timber to which the plaintiff was entitled. The evidence showed that at the time when D was alleged to have so prevented the plaintiff no relation other than that of vendor and purchaser existed between D and the defendants, except that of agent to procure a lease of the timber forest (from which the plaintiff was prevented from removing the logs of timber) in the previous July.

Held, that the acts of D could not be treated as the wrongful acts of a servant or agent committed in the course of his service, for the plain reason that at that time it was not shown that D was a servant or an agent for the purpose of working in the forest on behalf of the defendants, or of doing any class of acts analogous to those complained of, and that in the absence of proof that the defendants knowingly adopted or ratified those acts, or indeed of the acts having been committed for their benefit, the defendants could not be held fiable (136-7).

An agency to procure a lease of a timber forest is a totally different thing from an agency to work the forest under the lease (137).

With respect to the question, whether a principal is answerable for the act of his agent in the course of his master's business and for his master's benefit, no sensible distinction can be drawn between the case of fraud and the case of any other wrong. The general rule is, that the master is answerable for every such wrong of the servant or agent as is committed in the course of the service and for the master's benefit. It is not necessary that the master should have authorized the particular act of the agent. If he has put the agent in his place to do that class of acts, he must be answerable for the manner in which that agent has conducted himself in doing the business which it was the act of the master to place him in (135-6). Trial Judge's decision on question of-Reversal by High Court of-Points to be considered in case of.

In this case the plaintiffs sued for the recovery of certain property purchased in the name of a female member of the family (the wife of one of the coparceners) as guardian of her minor son on the ground that the property was joint family property and that, on the death of the minor, they became entitled to it by survivorship. The defendant, the son-in-law of the female member, claimed to be entitled to the property on the ground that the purchase was benami for his deceased wife, and, that, on her death, he was entitled to it. The first Court held with the defendant and dismissed the suit. On appeal, the High Court reversed its decree. On further appeal, their Lordships, while fully alive to the fact that there was much to be said against the case which the defendant made, and that persons in his position who made such claims as he made must expect their stories to be narrowly, and even sceptically, scrutinised, held that the question was not whether their Lordships would have believed his story, had they tried the case, but whether there was sufficient in the evidence to show that the High Court was right in holding that the trial Judge had misdirected himself as to the onus of proof, or had misjudged the weight of the evidence, or wrongly accredited certain of the witnesses called before him.

The judgment of the High Court was set aside, and that of the trial Judge restored. (Lord Sumner.) MOTI LAL p. KUNDAN LAL. (1917) 22 M. L. T. 10 = 6 L. W. 92 = 15 A. L. J. 329 = 1 Pat. L. W. 490 = 19 Bom. L. R. 471 = 21 C. W. N. 929 =

-Compromise between admission of appeal and transmission of printed record altering terms of decree.

Held that the High Court had such jurisdiction, where one of the terms of the compromise was that the infant appellant's appeal should be withdrawn, and that thereupon the appeal should be struck off the file so as to shut out the infant from prosecuting it. NARAINASWAMI PILLAI P. CUPPUSWAMI PILLAI. (1894) 4 M. L. J. 112.

MINOR-COMPROMISE AFFECTING.

-High Court's certificate as to beneficial nature of-

In all cases where it is desired to bind persons under disability by a compromise, it is of the utmost importance that there should be a clear expression of opinion by the proper Court in India that such a compromise is a beneficial one for those persons. In rare cases the Judicial Committee may accept the burden of considering the question of the beneficial nature of the proposed compromise as regards the persons under disability, but this is not the regular and usual course.

The petition for leave to withdraw the appeal upon the terms of an agreement by way of compromise was accordingly allowed to stand over until the proper certificate had been obtained from the High Court. -For over three years the record of the appeal has been in the Privy Council office, and no adequate reason is offered as to why that time has elapsed before this matter has been set down for trial. Their Lordships think it is of the utmost importance that the people in India should realise that the statements their Lordships have made, as to the essential duty on the part of litigants to use all reasonable speed to bring their cases to trial, are not mere empty phrases; and their Lordships mean to enforce and make them effectual by the only instrument in their hands, by dealing with the question of the costs on the appeal where the delay arises. In an action for divorce brought by a husbond against his wife and a co-defendant on the ground of adultery, the Supreme Court reduced the amount directed by the court below to be paid by the co-defendant as damages.

Their Lordships affirmed the decree below, observing :-It is impossible for this Board to re-assess the amount of damages. The real question is whether there is enough to induce the Board to disturb the decision at which the Supreme Court arrived. The Supreme court clearly had jurisdiction to review the amount of damages awarded; they had all the facts before them; they knew the value of money in the island; and they were in a position to form an opinion as to what was a reasonable sum to be awarded in such a case. ## Declaration in-Nature and effect of-Duty of Court below to give effect to.

Failure to do so-Prity Council's duty in case of. A declaration of Her Majesty in Council is not equivalent to an order. It is the duty of an appellate court frequently, and all that it can do, to make a declaration, and then the form in which that declaration is conceived, and the words in which the order is framed, amount to a direction to the court below to clothe that declaration in the proper form of a mandatory order, and to give effect to the mandatory order so expressed. If any difficulty arises in that form, or any difficulty is sought to be produced from having recourse to that non-existent ground of objection, the Privy Council would not fail in recommending. Her Majesty to deal with such obstructiveness in the most serious and stringent manner (677). BARLOW P. ORDE. (1872) 2 Suth. 668=

-Res judicata against respondent-Decree operating os-Amendment to avoid.

A respondent in an appeal to the Privy Council against whom an Order in Council had been passed put in a petition to the Privy Council complaining that he was not properly made a party to the suit in the courts below, and that the proceedings in India, so far as he was concerned, were coram non indice, and praying that the Order in Council might be varied so as to prevent its being used against him as a bar to any proceedings which he might otherwise be entitled to take in the courts of India.

Held that, assuming the facts alleged to be true, the issue involved therein could only be properly tried in 2 new suit in India, especially as the petitioner desired a re-trial of the cause on fresh evidence, and that the order in Council could not be varied on that account (176-7).

Scruble: If the facts alleged were established, it might be that the final decree in the suit, considered independently of the Order in Council, and merely as a decree of the Indian Courts, would not be res judicata against applicant (1767)

Semble: applicant might, if he succeeded in shewing that the decree appealed against was not binding on him, contend that the Order of His Majesty in Council would not operate as a har to the trial of the new suit (177.) of damages, without specifying whether fresh evidence was to be let in and the Indian Court feeling a doubt on the matter directed the parties to ascertain the intention of the Board, the Judicial Committee would entertain a petition for that purpose and give its opinion. #### COSTS AWARDED BY.

-First Court's costs if included in -Prever awarding costs of all courts in India.

The decrees of the Zillah Court and of the Sudder Court (on appeal) dismissing a suit on the ground of limitation were reversed by the Privy Council, which remanded the case for trial on the merits, and directed that the costs of the sait, occasioned by the plea of limitation, should be paid to the plaintiffs by the defendant. That order as to costs was only partially carried out; the costs of the appellate Court were paid, but not the costs incurred in the Court of first instance. The case again came up before the Privy Council, after the trial on the merits, when the Privy Council, by its order, directed " that the costs of the appellants " (plaintiffs) " in the three courts below " (which did not include the Zillah Court)" be taxed and ascertained by the proper officers of those courts respectively, and that the costs of the appellants in all the Courts in India be paid to the appellants in India by the respondents."

Held that the appellants (plaintiffs) were entitled in execution to their costs of the Zillah Court. (Sir James III Colvile.) FORESTER v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA. (1877) 4 I. A 137 (144-5) = 3 C. 161 (171-2) = 3 Sar. 717 = 3 Suth. 405 = 1 P. R. 1877.

Interest on-Each Court's costs-Interest on, as from date of its decree-Right to-Jurisdiction of executing Court to award-Decree awarding costs of all Courts not expressly providing for such interest.

An Order of His Majesty in Council directed that the costs of the appellants in all the Courts in India should be paid by the respondents, but was silent as to interest upon the costs decreed. In execution of that Order, appellants claimed interest upon the costs awarded and that the interest on the sum incurred for costs in each court should be computed from the date of the decree of that court. Held that, even assuming that the appellants were entitled to interest upon the costs decreed, they were not entitled to have the interest computed in the way they asked for (142.)

So far as their Lordships are aware, there is no instance of such a course having been adopted. The Committee that made the report to His Majesty upon which the Order in Council was made, if it had intended to place, by means of some such direction, the parties in the situation in which it considered they would have stood if everything had been done rightly in the lower courts, would of course have been competent to do so; but that a subordinate court executing an Order in Council which is silent upon interest, is at liberty to interpolate such a very special direction into that order is a proposition which seems to their Lordships to be wholly untenable. #### EVIDENCE OF.

Certified copy-Other evidence-Admissibility of latter-Condition.

An application to execute a decree of Her Majesty in Council by one of two plaintiffs was met with the objection that under S. 610 of C. P. C. of 1882 the application could not be granted because it was not accompanied by a certified copy of the decree of Her Majesty in Council. The defendant, who opposed the application, had himself bought the interest of the other plaintiff. He had the certified copy of the decree of Her Majesty in Council with him, but he neglected to file it, as he ought to have done, in the court, Under those circumstances the Courts below held that the defendant's objection could not be sustained, and that a copy of the Orsler in Council, though perhaps not a certified copy, might be properly admitted.

Hold that the Couris below were right in so holding (15), The provisions of S. 610 of C. P. C. of 1882 cannot be construed as restricting the only possible evidence to the certified copy, but as directory words with the object of ecuring that proper information upon the subject of any Order in Council should be supplied to the Courts in India (15-6). #### EXECUTION OF.

-Application for-Rejection of by Judge of High Court-Order of-Judgment if a. under el. 15 of Letters Patent-Appeal from that order under that section-Right

An application made to execute a decree of Her Majesty in Council was refused by the Judge of the High Court empowered to deal with such applications. On an appeal preferred to the High Court under S. 15 of the Letters Patent from that order, the majority of the judges held that the order of the learned Judge below was a judgment within the meaning of S. 15 of the Letters Patent and that an appeal lay from it.

Held that the view of the majority of the Judges in appeal was right (16-7).

The majority of the learned Judges held (and their Lordships think rightly) that whether the transmission of an order under S. 610 of C. P. C. of 1882 would or would not be a merely ministerial proceeding, the learned Judge below had in fact exercised a Judicial discretion and had come to a decision of great importance, which, if it remained, would entirely conclude any rights of the applicant to an execution in the suit. They held, therefore, that it was a judgment within the meaning of S. 15 (16-7). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) HURRISH CHUNDER CHOWDHRY P. KALI SUNDA (1882) 10 I. A. 4=9 C. 482 (493)= RY DIBIA. 12 C. L. -Function of High Court on-Ministerial or Judicial-Right to execute-Decision on-Jurisdiction.

An application for execution of an Order in Council of Her Majesty was refused by a learned Judge of the High Court on the ground that the applicant was only one of the two plaintiffs in whose favour the decree was passed and that the decree could not be executed partly by one of the plaintiffs. On appeal from his order, the Chief Justice, who dissented from the majority, held that the learned Judge below had no jurisdiction to inquire at all whether or not the applicant had a right to execution; that his function was purely ministerial; that all he could do, or ought to have done, was to transmit the decree of Her Majesty in Council to the Lower Court for execution; and that he usurped a jurisdiction which did not belong to him.

Held that the learned Judge could not be properly treated as having usurped jurisdiction (17). (Sir Robert P. Cellier). HURRISH CHUNDER CHOWDHRY v. KALI SUNDARI DEBLA. (1882) 10 I. A. 4-9 C. 482 (493-4)-12 C. L. R. 511-4 Sar. 407.

Peremptory order to Court below for - Grant of, on petition - Conditions.

The petition to their Lordships was for a peremptory order addressed to the Judges of the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut at Madras, commanding them to carry into execution an order of Her Majesty in Council, confirming a Report of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, made in an appeal to Her Majesty in Council, and praying that the petitioner might be put into possession of the lands and other property, the subject of the appeal, which were awarded to him by such report and order.

The Sudder Court decided certain suits in favour of A; and, pending appeals from its decrees to England by the petitioner and others, put A into possession of the disputed estates, which were of great value, without taking from him the security required by Madras Reg. VIII of 1818, S. 4. The Privy Council reversed the decree of the Sudder Court and directed that Court to put the petitioner into possession of the estates. Pending the appeal to the Privy Council the Board of Revenue took possession, sold a portion of the estates for satisfaction of arrears of revenue, and became themselves purchasers. After the decision of the Judicial Committee in his favour the petitioner applied to the Sudder Court to be put into possession of the properties decreed to him in execution of the decree of the Privy Council. The Sudder Court declined to interfere or carry into execution the decree of the Privy Council. being evidently of opinion that the property in question having been seized by the Board of Revenue, and being in possession of that Board, they had alone a rightful title, with which the Sudder Court could not interfere. court consequently conceived that, having ascertained that fact, they had discharged their duty, and no more depended upon them. Thereupon, the petitioner presented the petition aforementioned to the Judicial Committee.

Their Lordships advised Her Majesty that the Sudder Court should be directed forthwith to carry into execution the order of Her Majesty in the original appeal, and to direct the Collector to put the petitioner into possession of the property, according to such order made in the decree, reserving to the Madras Government, and all persons except the respondents in the original appeal, the right to appear for their interest if any. Conformity between — Necessity—Petition to make order in Council conform to judgment—Grant of

It is the duty of their Lordships to see that the order, which His Majesty makes in Council, faithfully represents the advice, which in the judgment they have said they would humbly tender to him (305).

In a case in which their Lordships allowed an appeal and pronounced judgment in favour of the plaintiff, the formal order of His Majesty in Council used the word "appellants" in the plural. The plaintiff and appellant presented a petition to have the order made rescinded and an order pronounced in tayour of herself alone. It was clear from the judgment that by the expression "plaintiff" their Lordships designated the plaintiff-appellant alone.

Held that the prayer of the petition must be granted, in so far as it prayed to have the order in Council made to conform to the judgment pronounced (213). (Lord Dunidin). LAJWANTI 2: SAFA CHAND.

LAND DEMARCATED BY THAKBUST MAP AND PROCEEDING OF 1839.

-Survey map of same year inconsistent with Thakbust map-Lands included in if pass under decree-Proceedings of 1839-Meaning of .

A judgment of His Majesty in Council declared that the appellant was entitled to recover "so much, if any, of the land claimed by him in this suit as was demarcated by the thakbust map and proceedings of 1839, as then bying to the north of the northern bank of the river Ganges." And the Order of Her Majesty in Council was made in the same terms.

In execution of the said order in Council the appellant contended that the professional survey made in the same year as the thakbust, 1839, differed materially from the latter, and would give him a much larger area as lying to the north of the northern bank of the Ganges, and that the Thakbust map was unscientific and untrustworthy. He contended that the intention of the above-mentioned judgment and report of their Lordships was to give him all the land which in fact lay to the north of the true river-hed of 1839, and that such true river-bed was that shown by the survey map of 1839. He said that, on a due construction of the said judgment and decree of the Judicial Committee, he was entitled to whatever lands should by the survey proceedings of 1839, i.e. the Thakbust map as corrected by the subsequent proceedings, and scientific survey map, appeared to have lain to the north of the northern bank of the true bed of the river Gangas in 1839." So that in fact what the appellant contended for was that the survey map was to be taken as the map showing the demarcation of the land, correcting the Thakbust map, where it differed from it; in fact that the survey map should be substituted

Now, whatever may be the merits of the one map or the other, the words of the judgment and of the order in Council are not in any way ambiguous. There is no difficulty in interpreting them. They say distinctly that the appellant is to recover what was demarcated by the Thakbest map and proceedings of 1839, and it appears from the judgment to be obvious that the proceedings in 1839 meant the proceedings relating to the Thakbust maphardly be that their Lordships, when they gave that judgment intended by the words "proceedings of 1839" to include a survey map which it is now said differs from the Thakbust map and is sought to be used to correct it. An order in Council declared the plaintiff absolutely entitled to two named villages, and to all the rest of the land in dispute which was not comprised in the settlement of Havakee. By the declaration in the order in Council it limited Havalee to 123, 207 beegahs, including 129 beegahs and 19 beegahs, part of Beadon settlement, and so much of the land in dispute as belonged to or was attributable to the Bunker and Boondee Mehals. It then directed the High Court to make the inquiry necessary to understand what this last-mentioned land was and to proceed in the suit as upon the result of such inquiry might seem just,-dealing with the whole question of costs including the taxed costs of the appeal.

Held, on a construction of the order, that the plaintiff might well wait the result of those inquiries and accounts before applying for the execution of the earlier part of the decree with reference to the named villages to which he was declared entitled; and that the High Court might well decline to execute the earlier part of the decree until they had completed the whole of the inquiries and accounts (495). ## Default to prosecute—Dismissal of appeal for. EFFECT OF-ORDER IN COUNCIL.

Construction.

An order was made calling upon the appellant in a Privy Council appeal to deliver printed cases in a fortnight and intimating to him that otherwise the cause would be heard ex parte. No cases were delivered, and the cause coming on accordingly, and the appellant not appearing, an order was made that, after hearing the counsel for the respondents, and no one appearing for the appellant, the decree appealed from be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs. That order was confirmed, that is to say, the report of their Lordships was adopted, and made an order of the King in Council,

Held that a simple dismissal was what was intended by, and what was the effect of, the order finally made by the Privy Council, although the objectionable form, importing affirmance, was followed, and that the Privy Council had therefore jurisdiction to rescind the order of dismissal and restore the appeal on a proper case being made out for such restoration. #### NATURE AND EFFECT OF.

An order of His Majesty in Council dismissing an appeal for want of prosecution does not deal judicially with the matter of the suit and can in no sense be regarded as an order adopting or confirming the decision appealed from. It merely recognises authoritatively that the appellant had not complied with the conditions under which the appeal was open to him, and that therefore the appellant is in the same position as if he had not appealed at all. -An appeal to the Privy Council, which had been dismissed for want of prosecution, on the ground that no step had been taken in it for 10 years, was upon petition to the King in Council restored on condition of the appellant paying the costs of dismissal and restoration.

The grounds alleged in support of the petition for restoration were that the appellant was ignorant of the form of proceeding in England and took no steps in it for some years, that he then entered into an agreement with a firm at Calcutta, for the appointment of an agent in England for the purpose of prosecuting the appeal, and that as the agent to the Calcutta house in England became insolvent nothing was done on the part of the appellant in the matter of his appeal (467-8). STAY OF-HIGH COURT'S JURISDICTION AS TO.

Appeal admitted by High Court.

An application for stay of proceedings in execution of a decree of the High Court, pending an appeal from it to the Privy Council, ought always to be made in the first instance, at any rate, to the Court in India, which has ample power to deal with the matter according to the circumstances of the particular case, and has knowledge of details which this Board cannot possess on an interlocutory application.

In a case in which such an application was presented in the first instance to the Privy Council, but there was an indication in the judgment of the High Court showing that in their opinion an extension of the stay of proceedings ought to be granted, their Lordships, acting upon that suggestion, granted a stay of proceedings on the appellants

Pending an appeal by petitioner a senior widow, to the P. C. against a decree directing her to pay large sums of money to the re-pondent, her co-widow, petitioner applied to the court below for an order under S. 608 of C. P. C. of 1882, either staying execution of the decree appealed from, or directing execution to issue only on condition of the respondent furnishing security. The court below rejected petitioner's application, and directed execution to issue in default of payment. It also rejected an application by the petitioner for leave to appeal to the Privy Council from its order rejecting petitioner's application.

On an application by the petitioner, their Lordships granted special leave to appeal from the order rejecting petitioner's application and from all orders passed subsequently thereto and in consequence thereof, but declined to stay execution on the ground that it was not competent to them to do so.

Their Lordships, however, intimated their opinion that the case was a fit one for stay on terms, and reserved liberty to the petitioner to apply to the proper court in India for the due safeguarding of the money paid by her pursuant to the order of the Court below. In a case in which special leave to appeal to the Privy perty as beir of its last owner was granted, plaintiff applied to the High Court under S. 608, C. P. C. of 1882 for an order that the manager who was then in possession of the property, should remain in possession thereof until the disposal of the appeal to the Privy Council. The High Court dismissed the application on the ground that they had no jurisdiction to grant it. On a petition presented to the Privy Council praying for a reversal of the order of the High 'ourt dismissing the application and for a direction to the High Court to deal with the application made to it on the merits. Held that their Lordships could not direct the High Court to act where they had no jurisdiction, and that it was quite impracticable that the Privy Council should directly interfere to continue the manager, or to appoint a discharge of the order.

Interference has been effected here in case where the Courts below had jurisdiction over the subject-matter, and an intimation to them would be effective; or, where the appellant being in possession, a stay of proceedings would keep the position of things in fact. The petitioner asked for a stay of proceedings in the case; and their Lordships are disposed to accede to this suggestion, because it is highly inconvenient that there should not be any interim protection at all pending such an appeal as this, (Lad. One of the objections to the view taken by the High Court is based on the ground that the learned Judges in entertaining the Second Appeals had no jurisdiction to set aside the decision of the District Judge on questions of fact, in respect of which he concurred with the court of first instance. This objection is not without force, but, in view of the fact that the learned Judges of the High Court have differed from the lower courts, not only in the estimate of the evidence, but also with regard to the inferences derivable from documents produced in the case, and other circomstances, their Lordships deem it expedient to deal with the appeals on their merits. Review-Final decree in respondent's factor onAppeal from-Objection to decree in, on ground that it went beyond review application-When not permitted.

On appeal to the Privy Council from the final decree made in favour of the respondent on review, the original decree being wholly against her, it was contended that the court below had been wrong in its procedure, because while the application for review related only to the immoveable properties, the decree made on review related to them and to the moveables also.

Held, that the objection was purely technical, and orghi not to be yielded to (499).

There has been no surprise. The question was fully argued before the court below on ample notice to both parties. It has been fully argued here. The result of yielding to the objection might be to place the respondent at a very unfair disadvantage. She had a right to appeal to Her Majesty against the whole or any past of the original decree. She would not have lost that right of appeal even if she had limited her application for a review to the immoveable property. She was relieved from the necessity of appealing by obtaining a final decree in her favour as to the whole of the property, whether moveable or immoveable. If this objection were to prevail, there could be no final determination of the question as to the former or its merits (499-50). (Sir James W. Colvile.) BHUGWANDEEN DOORY P. MYNA BAEE. (1867) 11 M. In a suit for breach of an alleged contract for sea insurance, the defendants in the courts below tought out the case on the merits and did not rely upon the ground that the contract being in breach of the provisions of S. 7 of the Indian Stamp Act II of 1899 was unenforceable. On appeal to the Privy Council by the plaintiff, the objection based on S. 7 was taken and was sustained. The plaintiff asked that, in the event of the respondents succeeding upon that ground, they should not be allowed any costs.

Held that the respondents were entitled to have the judgment of the Board on the merits, and to have the appeal dismissed with costs, if they could support the judgment of the High Court upon the grounds on which it was given, viz., or the merits (129-30). It appears that on the appeal to the High Court this point was mentioned in the notice of appeal, and the judgments say of it that the appellent's advocate "stated that he did not desire to press it," and so no more is said about it. Their Lordships think that they must accept this statement. It is true that the same learned gentleman included this point again in the present appellant's petition for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council, which is dated on the very day on which the judgment of the High Court was given, but in the absence of any evidence that the judgment was erroneous on this point the appellant must accept it, and cannot raise here, by way of exception to the High Court's decree, a point which he elected not to advance for the High Court's determination. -Local custom of-Question as to.

At the last stage of the argument the respondent's counsel raised the contention that Handwa is in any case locally ia Kharakpur, and that, by a well-established local custom now always recognised. Kharakpur ghatwali lands are alienable. The point was put solely as one of local custom. Their Lordships might well have refused to entertain this contention, for it involves important considerations of fact as well as of law, and it had not been determined or even discussed in the Courts in India. It was, however, said to rest on a series of decisions of long standing, and their Lord ships, loth to appear to cast any doubt upon such authori-ties by refusing to take account of them on the ground of a rule of procedure, have determined, under the circumstances, to deal shortly with this contention. LAW-POINT OF.

-Document-Construction of-Facts admitted or proced-Point upon.

When a question of law is raised for the first time in a court of last resort, upon the construction of a document, or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy, it is not only competent, but expedient, in the interests of justice, to entertain the plea. This is based upon the general principle upon which a tribunal of last resort exercises in the public interest the jurisdiction conferred upon it (35-6). (Lord Atkinson.) -Pure point of late-Point depending upon facts distinction.

Nobody is ever precluded from raising a point of law, except where there are some other considerations which would make it unfair that he should raise it. Where the point is not a pure point of law and depends very largely upon the facts, it cannot be permitted to be raise for the first time in an appeal to the Privy Council (12) (Lord Phillimore., LINGANGOWDA v. LAW-POINT OF-(Contd.)

-Pure point of law-Permissibility of-Rule-Exception.

There may have been occasions when the Board have entertained an argument on a pure question of law, although it has not been presented in the lower Courts, when all the facts on which the contention depended had been definitely ascertained, but the objection to doing so in the present case goes very deep.

The appellant, the plaintiff in the suit, raise! for the first time before the Privy Council the contention that an assessment under the Madras Encroachment Act of 1905 was leviable only on the actual occupant of the land encroached upon, and could not be levied upon a person in the position of the appellant, viz., a lessor who had granted leases of the land under the bona fide belief that it formed an accretion to his estate. That contention was not put forward in the Courts below. On the other hand, the whole controversy between the appellant and his predecessor-in-interest on the one hand and the Government on the other which had preceded the actual imposition of the penal assessment proceeded upon the admission or tacit assertion, of the appellant that he was in occupation of the lands, or, at all events that he took upon himself the burden of vindicating the action of his own lessees or sub-lessees in cultivating it. The result of the position so taken up by the appellant was that the Government had no opportunity of considering upon whom the notice of assessment which they ultimately sent to the appellant should have been given, and upon whom the penal assessment should have been levied.

Held, that it was too late for the Board to entertain the contention put forward (68-9). (Lord Salvesen.) MAHA-RAJA OF VIZIANAGRAM P. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA IN COUNCIL-(1926) 53 I. A. 64 = 49 M. 249 =

LEAVE TO APPEAL GRANTED BY COURT BELOW-ORDER OF.

Point not included in.

In a suit to enforce a mortgage made by the manager of a joint Hindu family, the High Court, on appeal, held that the mortgagee had proved necessity for Rs. 1,698-5 0 out of the sum of Rs. 3,000 secured by the mortgage, and allowed the mortgage to stand only for the said sum of Rs. 1,698-5-0. The order of the High Court, under which the appeal to the Privy Council from the decree of the High Court was brought, did not include the question of considering whether, in point of fact, more than the amount allowed by the High Court had in fact been raised by way of necessity. After the transmission to England of the record of a Privy Council appeal, the appellant, G, applied to the High Court for leave to withdraw the appeal. Thereupon B, the widow of D, who died in January 1886, leaving also another widow, the respondent, applied to the High Court asking to have her name, or that of her adopted son, A. through her as guardian, substituted in the said appeal for

The appeal raised the question whether D had, by his will, given to the petitioner. B, the power which she had purported to exercise in adopting N. The execution of the will was denied by the re-pondent by whom D had a son who survived him, but that son had since deceased. Probate of the will, having been granted, was afterwards revoked. The petitioner represented that injury would be caused to the minor should the appeal be discontinued.

Held, that the petitioner ought to be substituted for the withdrawing appellant on the terms that she gave security to the satisfaction of the High Court for the costs already incurred, and undertook to abide by such order as might be made as to the general costs. -Addition of, on his own application with a vice to enabling him to file a cross-appeal.

In an ejectment suit brought against three defendants, the 1st Court decreed the suit against all the defendants. Each of the defendants was entitled to a third of the suit village. The second defendant alone preferred an appeal to the High Court and his appeal was valued at a third of the value of the suit village. The other defendants were joined as re-pondents to the appeal, but they did not prefer any appeal against the decree of the Court below as regards their shares in the suit village. The High Court, by its decree, directed the plaintiff's suit as against the second defendant, to be dismissed. An application by the third defendant that he might have the benefit of that decree so far as concerned his share in the suit village was rejected by the High Court. The plaintiff preferred an appeal to His Majesty in Council against the decree of the High Court dismissing his suit as against the 2nd defendant. Nearly 4 years after the appeal was preferred, the third defendant applied to His Majesty in Council praying that he should be added as a respondent.

Their Lordships ordered that he should be added as a respondent (140.) (Lord Shaw.) MALRAJU LAKSHMI VENKAYAMMA ?. VENKATA NARASIMHA APPA ROW.

-Death of, between hearing and judgment-Procedure on-Passing of decree with liberty to apply to Court below to add necessary parties-Propriety of.

In an appeal to the Privy Council in a suit in effect for the administration of the will of a deceased Hindu, their Lordships directed certain accounts to be taken against the surviving widow of the testator. She died after the argument in the appeal but before judgment was delivered. That death made the suit defective in two respects; first, by the death of the then heir the inheritance ceased to be represented; secondly, there was no person in whose presence the account directed against the widow could properly be taken. The proceedings were suspended in order that those defects might be cured; but though the testator's heir had been brought into the suit, there was no representative of the widow.

Held, that the decree of their Lordships ought not to be delayed any longer on account of that defect and that the plaintiff should apply to the Court below for all necessary parties being brought upon the record (134.) The High Court rejected the application on the ground that it was for their Lordships, and not for the High Court to dispose of the matter.

ISSUES.

-Courts below-Point not raised in-Raising for hest time of-Evidence in support of it neither clear nor uncontradicted.

The suit was by the maternal grandson of R to recover his properties as his heir. The defendants, the grandsons of a prother of R, opposed the plaintiff's claim, setting up a Jeed of gift or will by R in favour of one or some of them. The courts below concurrently found that the execution of the said deed had not been established, and that finding was admitted to be conclusive against the defendants. Before their Lordships the defendants, however, attempted to show that, independently of the particular instrument, the evidence was sufficient to warrant the conclusion either that a previous disposition of the property had been made by R to the effect of that contained in the will, or that he had so acted as to estop him and his representatives from denying that such a disposition existed. That was a new case, set ap for the first time at their Lordships' bar, the defendants having throughout the suit in all its previous stages, propounded a particular will executed by R. The defence suggested before their Lordships was raised neither by the sefendants' answer, the issues, nor the grounds of appeal.

Held that it would be improper to give effect to the new defence, unless the evidence to support it was so clear and ---- Evidence-Point not raised in-Raising for first time of.

The case against two of the defendants is sought to be distinguished on the ground that there are special circumstances connected with their holdings. But then it turns out that those circumstances were never relied upon in the pleadings. They form no part of the plaintiffs' case; no issue was directed as to them; there has been no proper examination of the case with respect to them. Therefore the High Court very justly, when these circumstances were brought before its attention on appeal, said that the plain tiff had no right to raise the point. It would be exceedingly unjust to the respondents if the plaintiffs were allowed to raise the point now. The case must be held to be closed. (Lord Hobboure). NAM NARAIN SINGH v. ### PRIVY COUNCIL-APPEAL-(Contd.)

Pre emption of - Doctrine of - Ecclesiastical Court's rules in Doctors' Commons as to-(Contd.)

When the appeal before their Lordships came on for hearing, the re pondent's counsel took a preliminary objection to its competency, contending that by the true construction of the Charter of Justice, which gave the Supreme Court exclesiastical jurisdiction in Bengal, and directed that the court should be governed by the same rules as the Ecclesiastical Courts in the Diocese of London, and the general principles and practice of the Exclesiastical Coarts which prevailed in India, at the time when the appellant filed her petition for leave to appeal namely, on 12-12-1844, her right of appeal was lost and pre-emptel, no appeal having been asserted within 6 days. The respondents contended that the latter part of the Charter giving six months time to appeal from all original judgments, decrees, or decretal or other rules or orders of the court, did not take away the general Exclesiastical law, which required that an appeal must be asserted within ,6 days, and that, therefore, the Supreme Court could not legally grant leave to appeal after that time.

Their Lordships, having decided against the appellant on the merits, left open the question whether the rules of the Ecclesiastical Courts in Doctors' Commons relating to the doctrine of pre-emption of appeal, applied to an ecclesiastical cause in the Supreme Court at Calcutta, so as to deprive a party of the Charter right to appeal within six months from the decree (407). Grounds.

The appellant applied for an extension of the time prescribed by Rule V of the Order in Council of 13th June 1853 by which the appeal stood dismissed unless steps for prosecuting the same were taken within 6 months from the arrival of the transcript and the registration thereof.

Tre affidavit filed in support of the application stated that an inquiry was then pending before the Master of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, arising out of the decree appealed from, and that it was anticipated that the findings of the Master would render the prosecution of the appeal unnecessary, and that the appellant was desirous of awaiting the event of the proceedings in the Master's Office in India, before prosecuting his appeal, as he might be saved the expense attendant upon the prosecution thereof.

Held that enough had been shown to induce their Lordships to retain the appeal notwithstanding the new rules, and to direct that the petitioner be at liberty to suspend proceedings thereon until further order. The appellant applied for security to the High Court, but the application was refused. He applied to the Privy Council for an order simillar to that made in 10 M. I. A. 196.

Their Lordships observed that if the application could be entertained at all, it could only be entertained on notice to the other side; but that, if the facts stated were correct, the High Court might have taken an erroneous view as to security. They therefore directed the appellant to renew his application to the High Court for security, observing that, if it was refused, he could appeal against therefusal on notice to the other side. ALTERATION OF JUDGMENT ON.

Jurisaiction.

It is unquestionably the strict rule, and ought to be distinctly understood as such, that no cause in this Court (Privy Council) can be re-heard, and that an order once made, that is, a report submitted to His Majesty and adopted, by being made an Order in Council, is final, and cannot be altered. Whatever, therefore, has been really determined in these Courts must stand, there being no power of re-hearing for the purpose of changing the judgment pro nounced. There cannot be a re-hearing upon the whole cause, and an entire alteration of the judgment once pronounced (215-6). (Lord Brougham.) RAJEENDER NARAIN RAE & BIJAI GOVIND SINGH.

The application for re-hearing was made on the mere ground that the petitioner had not been properly represent ed upon the appeal, or cited to appear to it. Petitioner's title was almost identical with that of another respondent who had admittedly been properly represented. By virtee of a deed executed by that respondent in petitioner's farour during the pendency of the Privy Council appeal, petitioner had obtained possession of the suit property and had be come solely interested therein. He had corresponded directly with the solicitor, who purported to act on behalf of both respondents, touching the appeal, and had furnished

Held that it was not intended by the Privy Council that the parties should be allowed to adduce additional evidence.

The question was essentially one merely of calculating the amount of damages, and it could not have been contemplated that either party would have proposed to call evidence long afterwards to contradict evidence which had been allowed to passs at the trial, when the facts were comparatively recent. A remit was necessary because their Lordships were not the proper tribunal to make calculation. (Lord Sumner.) PRAGDAS BUDHSEN, In re

A re-trial ought, no could, not to be directed solely to enable a party to mend his case, and to do so in India would be especially objectionable. Nevertheless, considering in this particular case the doubt that exists as to what really took place in the subordinate judge's court, and as to what is implied in his statement that the documents of which he speaks were identified and verified by the witnesses; considering also how much the conduct of a trial in India depends upon the judge, and that the defendants may leave been misled by his giving undue weight to the books, and to what was said concerning the entries in the books, and so prevented from going more fully into their case; and further considering that in this case the question is not merely one of money but one of character, and that the evidence on this record fails to establish satisfactorily on which side the truth lies, their Lordships are disposed, if the defendants should be so advised, to send back the case for re-trial BAROO GUNGA PERSHAD P. In or about 1894, appellant's father. N sied in July 1899, leaving three sons, the appellants. The agency was terminated on 161-1902. In September 1904 the appellants commenced the suit out of which the appeal arose against the respondent claiming a declaration that the respondent was liable to render accounts to the plaintiffs of the amount realised in respect of the said property for the hole period of the agency.

The Sub-Judge ordered an account of the income and expenditure from the month of July-August 1896 to the month of January 1902. Against that order the respondent appealed to the High Court. The appeal was allowed and the order of the Sub-Judge was varied so as to limit the amount to five months from August 1901 to January 1902.

On appeal by the appellants against that order of the High Court, they asked that accounts should be ordered for the whole period of the agency. Held that, in the absence of any cross-appeal to the High Court, or of any memorandum such as was required to be filed under S. 561 of C.P.C. of 1882, it was not competent for the appellants to get any further remedy than the restoration of the order of the Sub-Judge (6-7). Time for taking-Rule-Exception.

An objection to the mointernability of an appeal to the Privy Council on the ground that the leave to appeal granted by the Court in Incia was in the ci-cumstances of the case clearly ultra vires cught to be taken at the earliest moment, i.e. when the re-pendents first became aware that the irregular petition of appeal had been lodged. The obvious reason for this rule is that the great expense of preparing for the hearing of the appeal is thereby saxed, which is uselessly incurred if, when the objection is obtimately taken, their Lordships feel a bliged to yield to it (206), (Sir Montague E. STATUTE TAKING AWAY.

Express words-Necessity-Decision declared to be " final and conclusive "-Effect.

The prerogative of the Crown cannot be taken away except by express words; and in any case where the prerogative of the Crown has existed precise words must be shown to take away that prerogative.

In 1884 a Native Appellate Court was set up in New Zealand, the already exi-ting Native Land Court being ex-pressly continued. To these Courts the Legislature gave exclusive jurisdiction over the civil rights of natives in land and in matters of succession, probate, and administration. The object of the legislation was to provide for the determination of disputes among those natives according to their own customs, so far as those were not repugnant to the general principles of humanity.

The 93rd section of the Act of 1894 (No. 43 of 58 Vict.) declared that the decisions of the Native Appellate Court should be "final and con:lu-ive." There was no express exclusion of His Majesty's prerogative. On a question arising as to whether the words of the section excluded a petition to His Majesty for leave to appeal, held that the prerogative of the Crown was not taken away.

In the present case their Lordships have to deal with rights which are the ordinary legal rights of subjects of the king. The legal rights of this particular people in the matters of land, succession, and probate are subjected to the newly created tribunal. But for the creation of this court the law courts would have had to determine those rights as best they could, and an appeal would clearly have lain to His Majesty. The exclusion of the right to appeal to His aty would therefore be a forfeiture of existing rights on the part of sovereign and subject. (Lord Robertson.) WM. MATUA In the matter of the WILL OF.

TRIAL JUDGE'S DECREE.

-Appeal direct from.

A suit filed on the original side of the High Court against A and B, as agent of A. on two contracts, was decreed against A but disnipsed against B, who was however, directed to pay taxed costs to the plaintiffs. An appeal was preferred jointly by A and B against the decree which was made against them. Plaintiffs, however, did not appeal against the decree di-missing their suit against B. The appellate side of the High Court held A was not liable in respect of one of the contracts sued on, modified the decree below in re-pert of his liability under the other contract, with certain costs, and dismissed the suit against B. From the decree made on the appellate side of the High Court the plaintiffs appealed to the Privy Council seeking to make B as well as A liable on the contracts,

Held, that as the plaintiffs had not appealed against the decree of the trial Judge dismissing the sait, excepting as to costs against B. the appeal to the Privy Council was, so faas B was concerned, unsustainable and should be dismissed

The appeal to His Majesty in Council, in so far as B is concerned is in effect an appeal direct to His Majesty in Council from the decree of the trial Judge which is no allowable under C. P. C. of 1908, or under the Letters Patent of the High Court. O. 41, R. 33 of C. P. Code of 1908 was not intended to apply to such an appeal (87). (Six John Edge.) ### PRIVY COUNCIL-CRIMINAL APPEAL-(Contd.) PRIVY COUNCIL-CRIMINAL APPEAL-(Contd.) Function and jurisdiction of Board in

-in criminal cases the functions of the Privy Council are not to sit as a court of Criminal appeal, and it would he contrary to their constitutional duty to assume that position. A court of criminal appeal can go into questions of evidence and into questions of procedure, and can deal with the case on the same footing as an ordinary Court of Appeal. The functions of the Privy Council, on the other hand, are limited by the principle laid down in Dillet's case to something much more narrow, namely, this :- That if they find that what has been done has been grossly contrary to the forms of justice, or violates fundamental principles, then they have power to interfere. -The Judicial Committee of the Privy Council is not a Court of Criminal appeal and the rules set up with regard to the procedure of the Court of Criminal appeal in England are not the rules adopted by it. The authority, therefore, of English decisions, which apply to a different system, a different procedure, and a different structure of principle. must stand out of the reckoning of anybody of authority on the matter of the procedure of the Board in advising His Majesty. -The practice of the Board in appeals preferred to it in criminal cases is to the following effect:-It is not guided by its own doubts of the appellant's innocence or suspicion of his guilt. It will not interfere with the course of criminal law unless there has been such an interference with the elementary rights of an accused as has placed him outside or the pale of regular law, or, unless within that pale, there has been a violation of the natural principles of justice so demonstratively manifest as to convince their Lordships. first, that the result arrived at was opposite to the result which their Lordships would themselves have reached, and, secondly, that the same opposite result would have been reached by the local tribunal also if the alleged defect or misdire tion had been avoided. -Their Lordships do not, in criminal procedings, exercise the revising functions of a general court of crimi nal appeal. Their Lordships' practice has been repeated-ly defined. Leave to appeal is not granted "except where some clear depature from the requirements of justice" exists nor unless " by a disregard of the forms of legal process. or by some violation of the principles of natural justice or otherwise, substantial and grave injustice has been done. It is true that there are cases of applications for special leave to appeal, but the Board has repeatedly treated applications for leave to appeal and the hearing of criminal appeals as being on the same footing. The Board cannot give leave to appeal where the grounds suggested could not sustain the appeal itself; and, conversely, it cannot allow an

Function and jurisaiction of Board in-(Contd.) appeal on grounds that would not have sufficed for the grant of permission to bring it. Misdirection, as such, even irregularity as such will not suffice. There must be something which, in the particular case, deprives the accused of the substance of tair trial and the protection of the law, or which, in general, tends to divert the due and orderly administration of the law into a new course, which may be drawn into an evil precedent in future. - The Judicial Committee cannot be used in general as a Court of review in criminal cases. The Sovereign in Council does not interfere merely on the question whether the court below has come to a proper conclusion as to guilt or into cence; but such interference ought to take place where there has been a disregard of the proper forms of legal pro cess, grievous and not merely technical in character, or a violation of principle in such a fashion as amounts to a denial of justice.

The general principle is that the Sovereign in Council does not act, in the exercise of the prerogative right to review the course of justice in criminal cases, in the free fashion of a fully constituted court of criminal appeal. The exercise of the prerogative takes place only where it is shown that injustice of a serious and substantial character has occurred. A mere mistake on the part of the conbelow, as, for example, in the admission of improper evidence, will not suffice, if it has not led to injustice of a grave character. Nor do the Judicial Committee advise interference merely because they themselves would have taken a different view of the evidence admitted.

Error in procedure may be of a character so grave as to warrant the interference of the sovereign. Such error may for example, deprive a man of a constitutional or statutor right to be tried by a jury, or by some particular triberal. Or it may have been carried to such an extent as to case the outcome of the proceedings to be contrary to fundamental principles which justice requires to be observed. Even if their Lordships thought the accused guilty, they would not hesitate to recommend the exercise of the preso gative, were such the case. But where the error consists only in the fact that evidence has been improperly admitted, which was not essential to a result which might bare been come to wholly independent of it, the case is different The dominant question is the broad one whether subtaction justice has been done and, if substantial justice has been done, it is contrary to the general practice to advice the overeign to interfere with the result. In a criminal appeal to the Privy Council, two objections were taken to the conviction, the first being that the depositions were read over while other stages of the case were proceeding, so that the accused and his advocate could not attend to the reading over, being occupied with listening to the further evidence that was being given, and indeed, that they were not so loudly read that the accused or his advocate could hear them, and the second objection being that in some cases the depositions were not read out to the witnesses at all, they being left to read them to themselves.

The course pursued was not only not objected to by the accused or his advocate but was adopted in order to save time and to meet the wishes of the counsel for the accused. It was not suggested that the accused suffered any prejudice

Two parties were charged for their attacks upon each other in the same occurrence, and the charges were tried separately at two distinct trials. But, as the occurrences were common to both cases, the evidence given for the prosecution was similar to a substantial extent in each case. Each party no doubt was a witness against the other; but, on the other hand, there was also independent evidence. Although the two cases were tried separately, the High Court gave one judgment, but treated the cases as two cases which had been separately tried. They imported considerations from one case in o the other, but there was a body of separate evidence which was applicable to each case and that in itself was enough for the conviction. And the conclusion to which they came was right on the merits, and could only be questioned on the technical ground that they did not keep the evidence entirely distinct.

Once a criminal appeal is brought up by special leave it is incumbent on their Lordships to examine the judgment as given, even if it appears that the ground on which special leave was granted does not in fact exist in the case. But even in such somewhat exceptional case, their Lordships are not sitting as an ordinary criminal Court of appeal in which case they would be entitled to consider what would have been their own verdict. Though the criterion is hardly as strict as it would have been on an application for leave based on the simple ground that the evidence did not support the verdict, yet they must be satisfied "there is something which in the particular case deprives the accused of the substance of fair trial." Attempt or abetment-Conviction for full offence instead of for.

Although in general hardly anything could more conspicuously violate natural justice than to convict and sentence a man for an offence of which he was not guilty, it may be that irregularity alone is the proper term to use, when, the facts being the same, the evidence the same, the guilt the same, and the punishment the same, error has occurred in indicting him under the section which charges the full offence instead of under the sections which charge an attempt at or an abetting of the full offence, especially when this error could have been corrected in time, if the accused had put his counsel in a position to raise his defence clearly and in due form at the trial (60-1). Special leave to appeal in a criminal case was applied for on the ground that the admission in evidence of a particular statement was wrong and that the improper admission of that evidence amounted to a grave injustice and a violation of the principles of natural justice. The question of the admissibility of the evidence turned entirely on the interpretation of certain sections of the Code of Criminal Procedure and the Evidence Act.

-Jury-Misdirection of.

There are, no doubt, very special and exceptional circumstances in which leave to appeal is granted in criminal cases; but it would be contrary to the practice of this Board, and very mischievous, if any countenance were given to the view that an appeal would be allowed in every case in which it could be shown that the learned Judge had misdirected the jury.

Where the only foundation for an application for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a conviction by the High Court under Ss. 511 and 420 of the Penal Code was that the learned Judge did not in his charge to the jury correctly construe S. 511 of the Penal Code, or that he left the case to the jury when there was no evidence to go to the jury, held that, if their Lordships were to sanction an appeal in such a case, it would be very difficult to refuse leave to appeal in all cases in which it could be established that there had been a misdirection by the Judge who tried the case. The ground urged in support of a petition for special leave to appeal in a criminal case was that there had been such copious and prejudicial newspaper comment on the crime committed that a fair trial by jury was impossible in Bombay. An application had been made to the Governor-General of India to order that the trial be held elsewhere and was refused.

Held that to ask the Board to declare that such a refusal of the Governor-General, who had all the advantages of being in the country and of judging of the real state of public feeling, amounted to a violation of the principles of natural justice was nothing less than preposterous, and that their Lordships could not too strongly qualify the impropriety and uselessness of such a demand. -Charter of December, 1823 of-Reserving clause of -Appeal under, against verdiet itself-Maintainability.

The power to grant an appeal conferred by the reserving clause of the Charter of Bombay, of the 8th December, 1823, is by the words of that clause confined to a "judgment or determination" of the supreme Court. All that could therefore be done under that clause would be to allow an appeal for the purposes of ascertaining whether the "judgment or determination" of the Court was erroneous in point of law with reference to the indictment, or, in other words, whether there was error upon the face of the record, as in England. By no construction could the crown grant an appeal as to the verdict itself. The Privy Council could not go over again into the merits of the case. It was not intended by the charter that a new trial should take place (485.6). (Dr. Lushington.) QUEEN v. EDULJEE BY-RAMJEE. (1846) 3 M. I. A. 468 = 5 Moo. P.C. 276=

But the mere fact that the two courts do not agree on all the steps which lead to one and the same conclusion is no reason for disregarding the well-known rule. The rule, however, is not an absolute rule; it presses upon the appellant with more or less weight according to the circumstances of the case, and no doubt the fact that the courts have differed on some important but subordinate questions, is a matter to be taken into consideration in determining whether the evidence before the lower courts should be reviewed in detail.

-Narrative of circumstances -Failure of courts below to make minute and completely exhaustive-Effect.

It would be to misconstrue entirely the provisions as to concurrent findings in fact if the Judges of India were to have impliedly the duty laid upon them of making their narrative of the circumstances minutely and completely exhaustive, under the penalty that, if they failed to do so, the absence from their mind of elementary considerations might be presumed (162).

Where a concurrent finding of the courts below that the plaintiffs (persons who claimed under a deed executed by a pardanashin lady) had failed to prove that she understood the effect of the deed and that the same was intelligently and properly executed by her was sought to be attacked before their Lordships on the ground that in the course of a long judgment of the trial judge certain materials for arriving at a conclusion had not been set out in the narrative which the judgment contained, held, that that circumstance did not take the case out of the rule that in the case of concurrent findings of fact the right of appeal to the Privy Council depended upon the case involving a question of law (161-2). -Duty as to.

Though the fact that the Judges in India generally possesses advantages of forming a correct opinion of the probability of a transaction, and in some cases of the credit due to the witnesses, affords a strong presumption in favour of the correctness of their decisions on a question of fact, yet that does not, and ought not to, relieve this, the court of last resort, from the duty of examining the whole evidence, and forming for itself an opinion upon the whole case (433). ### Interference with—Rule as to—Applicability.

Colonial appeals

The judicature which has given greatest occasion for its development has undoubtedly been the Judicature of I die, but the principle is not in any way limited in its application to Indian legislation or Indian law, be it Hindu or Moslem. as such. Indeed it is obvious that if such a rule is a goo' rule to be applied to the finding of the courts in India, there could be no reason for suggesting that the findings of the courts of our great self-governing Dominions should be entitled to less consideration. Their Lordships wish it to be clearly understood that the rule of conduct is a rule of conduct for the Empire, and will be applied to all the various judicatures whose final tribunal is this Board. Interference with-Rule as to-Applicability-(Contd.)

-Nature of rule-Circumstances excluding its application.

The rule as to concurrent findings is not a rule based on any statutory provision. It is rather a rule of conduct which the Board has laid down for itself. As such it has gradually leveloped. Being a rule of conduct, and not a statutory provision, the rule is not cast iron, but it would avail little to try to give a definition which should at once be exhaustive and accurate of the exceptions which may arise. The rule applies in cases in which it is not shown that there has been a miscarriage of justice or that any principles of law or procedure have been violated in the courts below. (Viscount Dunedin.) -Findings in substance different and based on different grounds.

A, a Mahomedan, purchased property at an execution sale benami in the name of K. That was on 11-2-1851. On 8-4-1854, A effected the registration of an ikrarnama executed by himself, in which he declared that the purchasemoney was provided by A's wife, and that she was the real owner of the property. The statement as to the source of the purchase-money was false. As wife was very young, and wholly without property. So that A, was the real owner of the property before 8-4-1854. On that day the formal and ostensible ownership was transferred by A's, orders from K to his (A's) wife. The question for decision was whether that transfer merely changed one benamidar for another or gave a beneficial title to the property.

The subordinate Judge found that A intended the transfer to his wife to be for her benefit, and that she and her sons afterwards derived benefit from it, for about thirty years prior to the suit. He considered that A's wife became owner at the date of the ikrarnama.

The High Court, on the other hand, thought that the transfer to A's wife was simply a transfer from one benamidar to another. But they were so pressed with the evidence of title and of possession that they could not resist the conclusion that in some way the property was transferred before A's death in 1870. Their finding was that in or about the year 1859 the property was given by A to his wife or her sons, and was thenceforward acknowledged and dealt with by him as their property.

Held, that there was no such concurrence in the findings of the Courts below as would justify their Lordships in OF.

Two findings upon questions of pure fact, must, no doubt, be accepted by the Privy Council, but questions of the existence of an ancient custom are generally questions of mixed law and fact, the judge first finding what were the things actually done in alleged pursuance of custom and then determining whether these facts so found satisfy the requirements of the latter. This latter is a question of law DEIVASIKAMANY PANDARA.

Their Lordships have not here to deal with a consistent case deposed to by the witnesses for the plaintiff, and contradicted by the witnesses for the defendant, a case of which the determination depends on the credit to be given to the witnesses on one side or the other. In this case their Lordships' conclusion is very much founded on the inconsistencies and imperfections of the plaintiff's proofs. Moreover the finding of the courts below is consistent with the result of the investigation of the Magistrate, held immediately after the transaction, and with the finding of the Principal Sudder Ameen, already adverted to (a finding arrived at also immediately after the transaction), in favour of the validity of the deed. The judgment of the Zillah Judge contains several inferences which do not appear to their Lordships to have been warranted by the facts before him and it treats the order of the Magistrate dismissing the complaint of the Cazee as reversed, whereas it was confirmed, on appeal. The judgment of the High Court is a mere statement that the Judges of that Court saw no reason to differ from the finding of the Zillah Judge. (Sir James Calvile.) GUTHRIE D. ABOOL MOZUFFER.

-Applicability of rule as to concurrent findings to. Concurrent judgments of Courts below dissolving respon dent's marriage with his wife on the ground of her adultery with appellant reversed on the ground that there was no sufficient evidence on which the divorce could be supported.

Such reversal held not to violate the general rule of the Privy Council as regards concurrent findings of fact, because (1) the jurisdiction in question was new to the Courts of India, (2) the decree of the first Court was not final unless confirmed by the High Court, so that the confirmatory judgment of the High Court was practically the only judgment in the suit, and there were really no two separate judgments, and (3) statements of the wife were wrongly accepted as corroborative evidence against the appellant (118). HINDU LAW-ADOPTION-(Contd.)

The question whether a person had been adopted in the Dattaka form is a question of fact, the determination of whhich depends on the evidence. It does not cease to be such a question of fact, to which the rule of the Board as to concurrent findings of fact will apply, merely because the evidence relating to it to an important extent consists of writings. The quetstion is not one of construction of one or more deeds, which would be a question of law, but is a question as to the effect to be given to decrees, leases, and other documents as evidence of the fact of adoption and its consequences (57-8). -Will-Capacity to make-Proof of-Findings as to. In a case in which the question was as to a disputed adop tion and will raising the question of the capacity of a dying man, the trial Judge, not satisfied with the evidence brought before him, selected a witness to assist him with his judgment. There was no careful weighing of the evidence on both sides, but his decision was founded upon the single testimony of that witness. The Sudder Court (appellate court) said, " Little need be added to the arguments on which the Civil Judge has founded his decision, and they added nothing. They, therefore, adopted the con-clusions at which the Civil Judge arrived, based not upon a review of the whole of the evidence, but upon a witness chosen by himself, whose testimony in the opinion of their Lordships did not warrant the judgment which he had pronounced.

Rule as to concurrent findings held inapplicable to the case, notwithstanding that trial Judge had seen and heard witnesses, because the judgment of the trial Judge recorded the fluctuations of his mind from day to day in the course of an exceptionally long trial; the effect, often temporary, upon him of a particular piece of evidence or argument of counsel; it subjected every witness to criticism more or less unfavourable; and from this mass of often conflicting statements it was not easy for a Court of appeal to extract the precise grounds on which the final conclusion tested (175). The learned Judges of the Full Court, by a majority, affirmed the decision below.

On further appeal to the Privy Council, Aeld that their Lordships would be very loath to interfere in such a case unless it could be most clearly shown that there had been an error in law involved in the result reached, or that there was no evidence on which a jury of ordinary reasonable men could pronounce the verdict given on the facts (105-6.) MINOR-GUARDIAN-COMPROMISE DECREE AGAINST.

-Fraudulent and collusive nature of -Findings as to -Onus of proof-Error as to, and other errors-Findings vittated by.

In this case the Courts below concurrently held that a decree obtained against the guardians of a minor on foot of a compromise was fraudulent and collusive. They so found in a sait brought by the minor, after attaining majority, to set aside the decree and to recover the amount recovered thereunder. They, however, fell into an error in point of law, in assuming that the onus of proof lay upon the defendant, and that error appeared to have influenced their decision. They were also in error in giving undue weight to the non-appearance of the defendant (a mere child at the time of the transaction in question), and to his reluctance to produce the books.

Held that, under the circumstances, the rule as to concurrent findings of fact would not be infringed by a reversal of the decrees below (399 400). (Sir Robert Collier). BABOO LEKRAJ ROY P. BABOO MAHTAB CHAND.

As a general rule, the proper course, in a case in which the respondent objects to the grant of special karen appeal on the ground of misstatements in the petition for special leave, is for the respondent to move as early as pos sible to rescind the order in Council. An objection of that kind ought to be taken by the respondents as early as the matter is brought to their notice, for the plain reason, that if the leave to appeal is on that ground rescinded, to further costs are incurred. It is wrong to leave the objection using the hearing of the appeal, when the record has been sel from India, and when all the costs attending the bearing have been incurred (77). Application for-Nature of-Appeal as of right-Distinction

-Certificate of leave erroneously refused by court below in case appealable as of right-Grant of special leave in case of.

A petition for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court is not by way of appeal from the decision of that Court, but is one presented for an exercise of the prerogative right of the Crown to admit an appeal. Although such a petition is not an appeal, it is perhaps a more convenient proceeding than an appeal, because their Lordships can then grant leave on any other ground, if other ground appears for the indulgence that is sought; and if their Lordships find that, in a case in which the appeal is claimed as of right, the court below has refused the certificate for a reason which appears to them to be an unsound reason, then they would advise Her Majesty to admit the appeal (8). ## Application for-Point not raised in Raising of at hearing of appeal-Permissibility.

Special leave was applied for and obtained on the ground that important questions affecting a large community were involved in the decision sought to be appealed from. None of those questions were raised at the hearing of the appeal. The only question then raised was that the judgment below was unsu-tainable because it was declaratory only. That objection was not raised in the petition for special leave. It was not raised in appellant's petition to the High Court for eave to appeal, on which leave was granted by the High Court, which, however, became abortive.

HEARING OF APPEAL ON MERITS-COMPETENCY OF APPEAL HELD AGAINST-APPLICATION ALLOWED TO BE MADE ON.

-Grant of leave to appeal so as to treat appeal as if it had been regular.

On an appeal by the late Master of the Supreme Court of Madras against an order of that court dismissing him from his office on the ground of alleged official misconduct, their Lordships were of opinion that the appellant had no right of appeal under the charter. They, however, allowed the appellant's counsel to argue the case upon the merits, and, at the conclusion of the argument, they gave the appellant liberty to present a petition for leave to appeal, which they would recommend Her Majesty to grant, and then give their judgment upon the merits.

In accordance with the leave thus given, the appellant, on the same day presented a petition to Her Majesty in Council, praying that leave to appeal might be granted to him against the order complained of, and that Her Magesty would be pleased to refer such appeal to the Judicial Committee for adjudication by them, and that the said petition of appeal so presented to Her Majesty might stand in the same plight and condition as the same then was.

The Judicial Committee, upon that petition being referred to them, reported to Her Majesty, as their opinion that leave ought to be granted to the petitioner to enter and prosecute the appeal from the order complained of; and their Lordships further recommended that the appeal should come on for hearing upon the petition of appeal, and the printed case already lodged on behalf of the petitioner, and that the appeal should be allowed to stand in the same plight and condition as if the same had not been irregular (222-3). In this case in which the amount in value in the suit was admittedly beneath the proper appealable amount, it was urged that special leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council should be granted upon the ground that an important question of law affecting the whole community was raised under the Madras Estates Land Act, 1908, a question which had not been the subject of judicial interpretation. The question was whether the word "decreed" in S. 53 (3) of the Act meant decreed under the Act, and whether any former decree could have any operation.

On an application for special leave to appeal to the Privy Council, leave to appeal was granted by an order which, however, provided that the leave to appeal should be null and of no effect, unless satisfactory evidence should be supplied by the appellants to the Registrar of the Court below that the real or market value of the land in dispute exceeded the sum of Rs. 10,000. The appellants, it appeared, had alleged in their supplemental plaint Rs. 43,000 to be not the real or market value of the land but the auction price of the land, referring not to any then present auction, but to some past auction at which the property had been bought. The appellants, however, satisfied the Registrar of the Court below that the real market value of the land exceeded Rs. 10,000. The respondents contended that the value of the land in dispute was untruly stated in the plaint, in fraud of the revenue laws of India. and that leave to appeal ought not, therefore, to be granted.

Their Lordships were satisfied that, whatever misapprehension there might have been, there was no such fraud intended, and granted special leave (496).

Their Lordships are far from saying that, if they were satisfied that any such fraud was intended they would be disposed to grant the least indulgence to any party in any way participating in it (496). (Lord Justice Turner.) MOHUN LALL SOOKUL T. BEBEE DOSS.

Capture of Vessel.

-Completion of -Conditions.

In principle it would seem that capture consists in compelling the vessel captured to conform to the captor's will. When that is done deditio is complete, even though there may be on the part of the prize an intention to seize an opportunity of escape, should it present icself (121). (Lord Sumner.) -Neutral sovereign - Waters of-Capture honestly believed to have been effected outside-Boarding of within territorial limits-Damages-Claim by neutral sweezign for-Maintainability.

It is one thing to say that capture effected within Detch waters by boarding or otherwise, involves the restoration of the prize and quite another thing to say, that to board within the territorial limits a prize honestly believed to have been captured outside them must necessarily justify a claim for damages by the neutral sovereign concerned (122). (Lord Sumner.) PELLWORM, In the matter of the Steam (1922) 31 M. L. T. 117 (P. C.)

-Sulmission of vessel to captor's will-What amounts to-Hailing docon flag when not conclusive as to.

Submission by the captured vessel to the captor's will must be judged by action or by absention from action; it cannot depend upon mere intention, though proof of actual intention to erade capture may be evidence that acts in themselves presenting an appearance of submission were ambiguous and did not result in a completed capture. The conduct necessary to establish the fact of capture may take many forms. No particular formality is necessary (121).

Hidd, that hailing down the flag, when taken in conjunction with stopping the engines as ordered, was not conclusive of the fact of submission by the captured vessel. and that the fact, which appeared from the evidence, that the captured vessels were endeavouring to escape rather showed that they were resisting or evading submission to the captor's will (1212). Quare, whether or not in any circumstances, a prize, duly captured outside the three-mile limit, but carried intention-she can be boarded, may nevertheless be legitimately followed and reduced into possession within the line (120).

Such a principle is in any event inapplicable to a case where the neighbouring shore was inhabited and the actual field of operations was under observation by Datch officials, stationed there for the purpose. Such a case bears no analogy, at any rate to salving a prize, which, after being duly captured, has broken adrift or has otherwise by marine perils come involuntarily within the three-mile limit (120). (Lord Summer.) PELLWORM, In the matter of the Steam-(1922) 31 M. L. T. 117 (P. C.)

Claim in-Onus of Proof on claimant.

Shifting of -Condition.

The claimant's proof that possession of the steamers was finally taken will within the territorial waters of Holland makes it incumbent on the captors to establish affirmatively. at least that capture was legally complete while both the captors and the captured were still outside of them (119). Claim of territory.

-Clogging of, with district of justice and of regularity of proceedings of successful secretign-Propriety.

It would be little consonant with the principle of honograble amends between friendly powers, which is the foundation of claims of territory, to clog it with any distrust of the justice and regularity of the proceedings of the successful sovereign (126). (Lord Summer.) PELL-WORM, In the matter of the Steamship

(1922) 31 M. L. T. 117 (P. C.).

-Relinquished ship-Appeared value of-Claim to -Nature of - Selatium in money-Res itself-Claim to.

Where prizes have been requisitioned by the Admiralty for the use of His Majesty on the terms of bringing, or of undertaking to bring, the appraised values into Court, a claim to those appraised values, advanced on behalf of the neutral sovereign ought to be treated not as a claim for a solution in money but as a claim for the res itself, in the only form in which it can be returned (125). (Lord Summer.) PELLWORM, In the matter of the Steamship.

(1922) 31 M. L. T. 117 (P. C.).

-Relinquished ship-Appraised value of-Claimant Government-Right of-Relinquished ship still in specie.

There is nothing either in the decisions or in the words of the Orders and Rules, to warrant the contention that for the purposes of a claim of territory, the appraised value of a ship, when once it has been requisitioned, must be treated in all circumstances as if it were the Ship herself, lost or not lost; nor is there anything to restrict the right of the Prize Court to require the return to its Marshal, of a requisitioned ship, which is still in specie, in order that ally or by accident or inadvertence accross the line before it may decree its release to the claimant Covernment. The -Requisition of-Order for-Nature and effect of. An order for requisition in itself, however, is not a judgment in rem; it does not purport to charge property; it authorizes use and using up-that is, consumption-but it does not make the thing requisitioned a subject of sale (127). Return in specie impossible without default of captor -Damages in case of -Award of -Propriety.

When there has been no intentional misconduct or affront on the part of the captors, and the loss of the vessel in question, without default on the part of those in control of her, has made her return in specie impossible, the payment of damages to the claimant is a wholly inappropriate remedy (124). a Turkish subject. About three years before the war he had been naturalised as a Persian subject, but he continued to carry on his business in Constantinople as before. In partnership with a Turkish subject he traded as a manager of shipping, and, in co-ownership sometimes with Turks and sometimes with Germans, and in a few cases without any co-owners, he was owner of a number of vessels trading principally in the Black Sea. That business he carried on up to the very eve of the outbreak of the war between Turkey and Great Britain. He then happened to be in the Pirocas and while there he learned that was had formally begun. He took an early opportunity of removing from the immediate area of war his wife and children, and brought them to Piroeus. His Turkish partners he left in Constantinople. His material interests were there, because all his ships except the one which was seized and another, were in the hands of the Turkish Government, and his undertaking therefore continued as before in Constantinople. He next devoted himself to the fortunes of the vessel in question which he had bought in the previous August. She was a vessel at that time on passage eastwards, and reached Bombay before he had been able to communicate with the captain for the purpose of taking the formal steps necessary to change her flag and to establish her as a Persian vest. She reached Bombay flying the Turkish fiag, under the conmand of a Turkish captain, with a Turkish crew; she had no register on board, but in other respects she was docmented as a Turkish vessel. He accordingly went to Bombay himself for the purpose of trying to terminate her stay at Bombay, for the authorities insisted that before the change of ownership could be recognised the register must be produced and put into regular order. His intention was to forward the vessel to Busra.

In prize proceedings for the condemnation of the said vessel. held that the appellant had retained up to the time when the war broke out a commercial Turkish domicil, that the burden of proof was upon him to show that that domicil had been altered, and that every act of appellant at the time was consistent with the intention to retain his comme cial domicil at Constantinople, and was inconsistent with any intention to divest himself of it. In a proceeding relating to the grant of probate of a will. which recited the fact that the testator had adopted one C and made provisions on the footing that C was his adopted son, the caveators contended that C' had never in fact been adopted by the testator, that the recital in the alleged will that C had been adopted was false, and that it must be inferred from such false recitals that the alleged will was not a genuine will. The caveators attempted to have the question as to the adoption of C formally raised and decided in the case. Held, although the question as to the alleged adoption is not one which could be excluded from consideration by a Court when considering whether it is probable that the will is a genuine will or a fabrication, it could not be tried as a material and vital issue on an application for grant of probate, the necessary parties to such an issue not being before the Coart. Further, a finding either for or against the adoption would not be decisive as to whether the will which was propounded was a genuine will or a fabrication. The Court would be acting rightly if, in such a proceeding, it declines to frame an issue as to the alleged adoption, though the caveators would not be precluded from questioning the adoption. EXECUTION OF WILL-CAPACITY AS 10-UNUS OF PROOF OF.

The question was whether a will alleged to have been executed by a deceased person was genuine or a forgery. The question arose in a petition for probate presented by the father of the alleged testator, who was appointed executor. The defence stated was that the doccased never executed any will, and that the will propounded was fictitions and false, and fraudulently got up. Under this general defence the defendants maintained and endeavoured to prove that the deceased was in such a state of mental and physical incapacity as to be unfit to make a will on the date when he was alleged to have done so.

The will was one which not only complied with all requisites of formality, but which seemed to be in all respects reasonable in its provisions, and such as might naturally be expected to be made, having regard to the deceased's circumstances and family relations. The writer of the will, who declared that he saw it signed by the deceased, and the other witnesses, some of whom were, according to the evidence, expressly called in to see it executed, agreed in the material facts to which they spoke, and there was really nothing in their evidence which could justify or support the inference that there was any want of capacity on the part of the deceased, mental or physical, to understand and execute the will. They concurred in their account of the serious nature of the illness of the deceased, and in descriting him as being in a weak condition, but they did not support the defence that the deceased was not able fully to understand the act he was performing; and they concurred in saying that he sat up in his bed, which was on the floor, leaning against the pillows which were propped up, and so signed the document.

Held, that it was clear that with that testimony, and keeping in view the fact that nothing could be said against the reasonable nature of the provisions of the will (which was always a material element in such questions, from its bearing on the probabilities of the case), it would require a strong case in defence to lead to the result of holding that the will had been forged (139). -English law-Probate granted long ago but only in common form-. Ittack on-Onus in case of

Under the English law those who propound a will must show that the will of which probate is sought is the will of the testator, and that the testator was a person of testamentary capacity. In ordinary cases if there is no suggestion to the contrary any man who is shown to have executed a will in ordinary form will be presumed to have testamentary capacity, but the moment the capacity is called in question then at once the onus ties on those propounding the will to affirm positively the testamentary capacity. Moreover, if a will is only proved in common and not in solemn form, the same rule applies even though the action is to attack a probate which has been granted long ago (68). (Viscount Dunedin.) -Court exercising other than testamentary jurisdiction-Effect on.

On an application for probate of the will of a deceased person by R, who was described therein as the kartaputra of the deceased, caveats were lodged by, amongst others, the plaintiffs who claimed to be the reversionary heirs of the deceased entitled to his estate after the death of his widows. The District Judge, to whom the application was made, held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove their interest and that the will was proved, and granted probate of the will to R; and his decision was affirmed on appeal.

In a suit subsequently instituted by the plaintiffs for a declaration that they were the next reversioners to the estate of the deceased in case of an intestacy after the death of the deceased's widows, and that as such they (plaintiffs) were entitled to apply to the probate court to get the probate granted to R revoked, held that the will of the deceased having been affirmed in a court exercising appropriate jurisdiction, the propriety of that decision could not in the circumstances of the case be impugned by a court exercising any other jurisdiction (97).

-Person setting Administrator-General executor under will in motion and undertaking to indemnify him if

A Mahomedan lady executed a will, by which she appointed the Administrator-General of Bengal to be her executor if he should be willing to act, and if that officer should decline to act she appointed the respondent. That will purported to confirm certain transactions between the lady and the respondent, her manager, especially a release deed previously executed by her in his favour. The Administrator-General, having been put in motion by the respondent and acting under an indemnity from him applied to the High Court for probate of the will. The grandchildren of the testator as heirs entered a caveat. Ultimately, however, probate was granted of the will.

Pending the said probate proceedings the said grandchildren instituted a suit against the respondent and the Administrator General alleging that the release deed in his favour was obtained by the respondent by misusing his position of confidence with the lady and that it and the other transactions between him and the lady were invalid and ineffectual, and praying that he (the respondent) should be declared a trustee for the plaintiffs as regards the properties received by him from the lady.

HINDU AND MAHOMEDAN WILLS-GRANT IN RESPECT OF.

Effect of - Executors under wills-Title to pro-

From an early date the Supreme Courts granted probates of Hindu and Mahomedan wills. The practice varied greatly from time to time, and it was never perhaps very satisfactorily determined upon what basis the jurisdiction rested. It was, however, established that such probates might issue. But the Supreme Courts never applied the English rule as to the necessity for probate to Hindu or Mahomedan wills, nor did they attribute to such probates when granted the English doctrines as to the operation of probate. Under that system a Hindu or Mahomedan executor took no title to property merely as such by virtue of the probate. In the case of Mahomedan executors such a title was created for the first time by the Pro-

PURDANASHIN-WILL OF, CONFIRMING PRIOR TRANSACTIONS BY HER WITH HER MANAGER.

Grant of probate of in spite of opposition by her heirs-liflest of-Validity of prior transactions recited in will-Grant if conclusive as to.

A Mahomedan lady executed a will by which she appointed the Administrator-General of Bengal to be her executor. By the will she purported to confirm gifts of property made by her to the respondent, her manager, from time to time and a release deed previously executed by her in his favour relinquishing all her claims to the same. The Administrator-General, having been put in motion by the respondent and acting under an indemnity from him, applied to the High Court for probate of the will. The grandchildren of the testator as heirs entered a caveat. Ultimately, however, probate was granted of the will.

Pending the said probate proceedings the said grandchildren instituted a suit against the Administrator-General and the respondent alleging that the gifts and the release deed were obtained by the respondent from the lady by misusing his position of confidence with her and were ineffectual and invalid, and praying that the respondent should be compelled to account for the property which had thus come into his hands, and should be declared to be a trustee for the plaintiffs.

It was contended before their Lordships for the grandchildren that assuming, as the High Court thought, the effect of the decision in the probate proceedings was that the lady thoroughly understood the purpose and effect of her will, that it was her voluntary act, that she was of full testamentary capacity to make the will and that in that will she confirmed the release, the issues in the suit were not the same, because in the suit, in order to validate the confirmation by the will of the release and other transactions, it was necessary to show not only that the testatrix knew and intended what she purported to do by her will, but also knew what her actual rights were in respect to that release and those transactions, and knew them to be invalid and not binding on her—a matter which it was said did not and could not arise in the probate proceedings.

ONUS OF PROOF IN.

Citation of parties-Absence of-Forgery of will-

Proceedings were instituted under S, 50 of the Probate and Administration Act for revocation of the probate of a will on two grounds principally, viz., (1) that citations were not properly served on the petitioner (testator's daughter) or on her mother (her guardian at the time of the grant of probate) before the grant of the probate; and (2) that the will was a forgery. The issues raised in the case were (1) was no citation served upon the plaintiff? (2) is the will propounded by the defendant genuine or otherwise.

Held, if those issues were tried separately, and the plaintiff succeeded on the first issue, that in itself would be sufficient for revoking the probate; but it would still be open to the defendant to prove the will, and, if she succeeded, the probate would stand. If, on the other hand, the plaintif failed on the first issue, that would not preclude her from proceeding to prove her second ground, triz., that the will was forged, and the probate would stand or fall according to the result. The question of onus of proof is, therefore, of great importance in this case.

Held further that, when the first issue was found in favour of the plaintiff, the onus of proving the second issue

Person on whose behalf probate was obtained Application based on fraud by Failure to prove fraud Benefit of will taken by him-Effect.

The appellant, the sole heiress of a deceased Hindu, applied through her attorney for probate of a will executed by the deceased. A vakalatnama was executed by her in which she recited the will and gave authority to a certain person to appear for her in probate proceedings and manage the property. Probate was granted and the will having been proved, was acted on for some years.

At the expiration of that period, appellant applied for the revocation of probate on the ground that the will was forged and so were the other documents. The Courts below found against the case set up by her and rejected her application for revocation of probate. On appeal, held by their Lordships that there was no ground for disturbing the judgment of the High Court.

After four years, after having admitted the genuineness of the document and after having taken advantage of it, the appellant comes forward with a tissue of falsehoods. So far as their Lordships can see, she comes without anything more than a mere suggestion of fraud, and she asks that that question may be tried. (Lord Maringhton.) BABUI BACHA KUMAR.

A will daly executed is not to be treated as revoked, either wholly or partially, by a will which is not forthcoming takes it is proved by clear and satisfactory evidence that the later will contained either words of revocation or dispositions so inconsistent with the dispositions of the earlier will that the two cannot stand together. shew that the will which is not forthcoming differed from the earlier will, if it cannot be shown in what the difference consisted. The burden of proof lies upon the person who challenges the will that is in existence. These propositions are founded on reason and good sense and must therefore be regarded as of general application (87-8). (Lord Mannagh Lon.) NAWAR SAHIB MIRZA v. MUSSUMAT UMEDA KHANUM. (1892) 19 I. A. 83 = 19 C. 444 (450) = 6 Sar. 190.

The question was whether a will of 1860 was revoked by a will made by M in 1876.

The alleged wili of 1876 was not forthcoming. All that was known about it was to be found in a letter addressed by M to the Commissioner of Lucknow, and dated the 6th of December, 1876. In that letter, M expressed herself as follows: " I heartily desire that, with your permission and consent, a will in which I have appointed my grandson S my executor be formally and with certain conditions executed and ratified, so that in accordance therewith my estate may be managed after my death, in future, with the exception of the arrangement connected with the distribution (of stipends) among my dependents and the establishment of a charitable institution for the benefit of the public in general, the management and administration of which are not possible without the aid of Government." A little further on she said," a copy of the will is also forwarded for your inspection." And the letter concluded with the sentence: "In short, this last will and testament of mine, being completed and properly executed, shall after the Government shall have accorded its sanction thereto be deposited with the Govern-

No copy or draft of the will referred to in the letter was produced. The Government declined to have anything to do with the matter. M was recommended to deposit her will with the Registrar under the Registration Act, but that advice was not followed.

Held, upon the relevant materials available for consideration, the proper and necessary conclusion of law was that the will of 1860 was not revoked (87).

Considering the terms of the letter of the 6th of December, 1876, it is by no means clear that the will referred to in it was ever executed. The expressions in the letter are no doubt consistent with the view that the will was executed before application was made to the Commissioner, but they are not inconsistent with the view that the will was not executed at the date of the letter, and that it was not intended to be executed until after the Commissioner's consent had been obtained. There is nothing to show in what respects the alleged will of 1876 differed from the will of 1860. Nor, indeed, is it possible to determine whether the reference to " the arrangement connected with the distribution of stipends" and "the establishment of an institution" points to dispositions which are found in the will of 1860 and with which the testatrix did not propose to interfere, or to new and perhaps different dispositions contained in the alleged will of 1876 (87). -S. 90-Permission to sell under-Grant to administrator of, pending suit in competent Court for administration of property restol in him- Jurisdiction.

The District Court of Amerist granted letters of administration under the Probate and Administration Act to M to administer the estate of his deceased father, and property of the deceased became vested in M as such administrator. Subsequently an administration suit was instituted against M by the wife of the deceased in the Chief Court of Lower Burma for the administration by the Court of the estate which was in the hands of M. In that suit a preliminary decree was passed directing that certain accounts should be taken and certain enquiries made, and that the suit should stand adjourned for making a final decree until the accounts and inquiries had been taken and made. No receiver was, however, appointed, nor was an injunction issued to M not to continue to act as an administrator under his appointment as an administrator by the District Court of Amherst. Subsequent to the preliminary decree in the suit in the Chief Court, the District Court of Amherst granted, under S. 90 of the Probate and Administration Act, 1881, as amended by Act VI of 1889, permission to M to sell property vested in him as administrator, and in pursuance of that permission, M entered into a contract for the sale of the suit property.

The Provincial Insolvency Act presents a complete and exact defineation of a debtor's right to an order of adjudication on his own petition. It entitles him to such an order when its conditions are satisfied. This does not depend on the Court's discretion, but is a statutory right; and a debtor who brings himself properly within the terms of the Act is not to be deprived of that right on so treacherous a ground of decision as an "abuse of the process of the court." stage at which to visit with its due consequences any misconduct of a debtor is when his application for discharge comes before the Court, and not on the initial proceeding.

Under S. 16, sub S. 4 of the Provincial Insolvency Act III of 1907, the moment an inheritance devolves on an insolvent, who is still undischarged, it vests in the Receiver already appointed, and he alone is entitled to deal with the property so devolving. The alternative in the section applicable to vesting in the Court was no doubt inserted to provide for the case of a Receiver not being appointed at the same time as the adjudication of insolvency was made and to foreclose an argument that vesting was suspended until the actual appointment of a Receiver. The Court only acts through a Receiver, and any estate acquired by or devolving upon an insolvent is vested in him as from the date of acquisition or devolution whatever the date of the receiver's actual appointment (192). —S. 16(5)—Mortgage—Suit to enforce—Death of mortgagor pending, and his son (undischarged involvent) brought on as Legal Representative—Final decree obtained against son without impleading receiver—Effect.

Pending a sait to enforce a mortgage, the mortgager died, and his interest devolved on his son, an undischarged insolvent, whose property had vested in a Receiver appointed in insolvency. Without making the receiver a party to the suit and giving him an opportunity to redeem the property, the mortgagee brought the son on record in the place of his deceased father, and obtained first a preliminary decree, and afterwards a final decree by which the son was debarred from all right to redeem the mortgaged property. The High Court held that that procedure was justified by the terms of S. 16, sub-S. 5 of the Provincial Insolvency Act. They interpreted that clause as inferring that the secured creditor was entitled to deal with the security as though there had been no vesting in the Court or the receiver.

Held that that construction of the clause could not be supported and that the whole proceedings by which the son was made a party to the suit were ineffective to bind the equity of redemption vested in the receiver (193.4).

That the rights of the secured creditor over a property are not affected by the fact that the mortgagor or his beir has been adjudicated an insolvent is, of course, plain, but that does not in the least imply that an action against him may proceed in the absence of the person to whom the equity of redemption has been assigned by the operation of law. The latter alone is entitled to transact in regard to it, and he, and not the insolvent, has the sole interest in the subject-matter of the suit. To him, therefore, must be given the opportunity of redeeming the property. The contrary view would encourage collusive arrangements between the secured creditor and the insolvent and might involve the sacrifice of valuable equities of redemption which ought to be made available for the benefit of the unsecured creditors of the insolvent with whose interests the receiver is charged (193.4). Vesting in, of assets of firm-Effect of, on assets of firm in hands of minor members-Recovery of-Right of, if also vested in receiver

Four adult brothers who were governed by the Davabbaga law and who carried on certain businesses, were adindicated insolvents under the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1907, and a receiver was appointed under S. 18, sub-S. 1 of that Act.

Held that all the property of the firm vested in the Receiver on the making of the order of adiadication (S. 16 of that Act), and if any part of it had got improperly into the possession of a minor member of the family of the insolvents, the right to recover it was in the receiver (117).

It is only by its coming into the hands of the rereiver that its rateable distribution among the general body of creditors can be secured. Nor does it make any difference that the business was conducted by the male adult members of a Hindu family governed by the Davabhaga law: the rights and liabilities of a minor member of such a family would be measured by similar principles for the purpose now under consideration (117). Vesting in. of assets of firm—Effect of, on assets of firm in hands of minor members—Recovery of—Suit by firm's creditor for—Maintainability—Parties—Receiver if one.

The appellant and his four adult brothers were members of a joint Hindu family governed by the Davahhaga law. At the time of the death of his father, the appellant was a minor. The father had two businesses which were carried on by the eldest son as the karta. assisted by his adult brothers. After the death of the father, a new business was started by the eldest son. The businesses ended in loss, the adult brothers were adjudicated insolvents, and a receiver was appointed under S. 18 (1) of the Provincial Insolvency Act, in whom the property of the firm was vested. Meanwhile there was a partition of the ioint family property under which the appellant got one-fifth of bo h ancestral and self-acquired properties.

The plaintiffs-respondents were persons to whom more; was due under a hand note and hath-chitta signed by the adult brothers. The money due under the said documents was in fuct borrowed for the new business started by the eldest brother. As the dividend received by the plaintiffs in the insolvency fell short of the amount due to them, they sued the appellant for the recovery of the sums due under the said documents and claimed a money decree against him. The appellant denied his membership of the new business, and relinquished all claim to a share in the property thereof. The question for decision was whether, assuming that the appellant had come under any liability, that liability could be enforced by the plaintiffs, and whether they could recover for their exclusive benefit.

Held that, assuming that the appellant (a minor at the date of the suit) had been admitted to the benefits of the new business within the meaning of S. 247 of the Contract Act, the suits, as constituted, were misconceived, and should have been dismissed (118),

The parties belonged to one of the agricultural tribes of the Punjab, called the khattar. — Custom of — Mahomedan tribes who are endogamous — Applicability to — Exception in favour of daughter marrying near collateral who remains in her father's house as khana-damad (resident son-in-law).

Assuming that there is a general custom of agnatic or collateral succession in default of male issue to the exclusion of female heirs among the agricultural tribes of the Punjab, about which the decisions of the Punjab Chief Court are by no means uniform, especially in the case of Mahomedan tribes who are endogamous, it is clear that the rule is admittedly subject to a considerable number of exceptions. Held that the appellant had proved the custom set up by him that, in the sub-community of Dabs settled in the Jhang District of the Punjab, a daughter married to a near collateral who took up his residence in the father-in-law's house as a khana-damad or "resident son-in-law" succeeded to her father's inheritance to the exclusion of the agnates. Held, affirming the High Court, that in the distribution of the succession to B the full-blood excluded that half-blood which was claiming in the case.

The theory of abondoning the pagwand rule for the chundawand rule need not necessarily be put forward. For when the distribution or segregation which occurred and has been so long acted on arose, each portion of property thus succeeded to by the children of the second wife became a separate entity; and the rules of succession to it are rules of succession to the owner of it and not to the anterior or ancestral owner to whom, prior to distribution, a much larger entity inclusive of that portion belonged. It is, therefore, possible and it is necessary to decide this case on the simple ground that when the smaller entity thus formed is succeeded to the pagwand system may still apply, but it applies within the simple family of S's second wife's children and not within the range of the complex family consisting of the children of his two wives (205.6). Held, that plaintiffs had failed to prove the existence of a custom, among Sheikh Ansaries of a Pathan tribe of Punjab Mahomedans, by which a female could take only a life interest in the ancestral property which had come to her by gift from her sonless father, and had in such property no power to alienate it by a gift in her lifetime (29.30).

Held further, that neither evidence as to the limited rights by custom of a widow in her deceased husband's property, nor evidence that a Mahomedan father had been prevented by some local custom from giving the bulk of his property to one of his sons was evidence of the custom alleged (30). With regard to the true relation of the necessity of proof as between customary and established law, Robertson, J. observed in a case arising on the interpretation of S. 5 of the Punjab Laws Act: "In all cases it appears to me under this Act, it lies upon the person asserting that he is ruled in regard to a particular matter by custom, to prove that he is so governed, and not by personal law, and further, to prove what the particular custom is. There is no presumption created by the clause in favour of custom; on the contrary, it is only when the custom is established that it is to be the rule of decision, . . . . When either party to a suit sets up 'custom' as a rule of decision, it lies upon him to prove the custom which he seeks to apply; if he fails to do so clause (b) of S. 5 of the Punjals Laws Act applies, and the rule of decision must be the personal law of the parties subject to the other provisions of the clause,"

Semble, the generality of Ss. 9 and 12 of Act XII of 1878 is not cut down by Ss. 10 and 11. -Ss. 10 and 12-l'illage Communities in-Meaning

The expression "village communities" in the Act of 1878 is not used to denote a village community of the typical sort, consisting of members of one family or one clan holding the village lands in common and dividing between them the agricultural lambs according to the custom of the village. It seems rather to be used in a popular sense to denote a body of persons bound together by the tie of residence in one and the same village, amenable to the village customs, and subject to the administrative con trol of the village offices. There seems to be no reason why a village community should be confined to the landowners in the village. Occupancy tenants are members of a village community within the meaning of the Act, and so are all persons in an inferior position who belong to the village, though they may be unconnected with the land and not entitled to any right of pre-emption under the Act of RAHIM-UD-DIN P. -S. 12 (a)-Scope and effect of-Pre-emption-Remoter heirs of vendor-Right of.

S. 12 (a) of the Ponjab Pre-emption Act, 1905, does not contemplate merely inheritance by one person, or even by a group of people, who at the critical moment would be together equally entitled to inherit the property sold, if the vendor were dead, but it assumes that there will be different priorities as between the different claimants and that such priorities shall be determined in due order of succession. The meaning of the rather obscurely worded S. 12 (a) is made clear by S. 25 of the Act. There may be several claimants for pre-emption in respect of the same sale, those with inferior rights to pre-empt trusting that those whose rights are superior to theirs may be unwilling or unable to pay the pre-emption price decreed (76), (Lord Buckmaster). The mortgagor also promised to pay interest at the rate of 31 per cent, per mensem,

PUNJAB CODE-(Contd.)

In a sult brought by the mortgagee the Court below held that the amount of interest fixed by the deed, namely, 3\frac{1}{2} per cent, per mensem was usurious, and awarded half the amount of principal by way of interest. The question for decision was whether the amount of interest which had been awarded by the court below was a fair and equitable amount, or one which could legally stand. The Punjah Code, which had been extended to Oudh, admittedly applied to the case.

Held, modifying the decree below, that under S. 19 of the Punjab Code, a fair amount of interest would be at the rate of 12 per cent, per annum for the time during which the plaintiff was out of possession of the estate, and that he ought not to have any interest at all during the period in which the period is a which the period is a state.

in which he was in possession (86).

The amount of 3½ per cent, per mensem, or 42 per cent, per annum is unjustly usurious. At the same, time inferest equal to half, the amount of principal would not be much more than about 4 per cent per annum, and that would be too low a rate of interest to be allowed upon a mostgage in which 3½ per cent, per mensem had been agreed upon (86), (Sir Barnes Peaceck.) Where an award or an arrangement to which a purdanashin lady is a party is sought to be enforced against her, the question to be considered is, not whether the lady knew what she was doing, had done, or proposed to do, but how her intention to act was produced; whether all that care and providence was placed round her, as against those who advised her, which from their situation and relation with respect to her they were bound to exert on her behalf. Fraud cannot be condoned unless there be full knowledge of the facts and of the rights arising out of those facts, and the parties are at arm's length. (Sir John Edge.) SRI KISHEN LAL P. -Person in fiduciary position interested in proceedings leading up to award-Consent of lady to award procured by betrayal of confidence by-Effect.

In this case the High Court were of opinion that by a socalled award to which a purdamashin lady was a party no fair family arrangement was arrived at, and found that it had not been shown that the lady had any independent advice, or understood the effect of the so-called award on her interests. They therefore dismissed the suit to enforce the award against the lady with costs. On appeal their Lordships, while not dissenting from the conclusions of the High Court, considered that the appeal might be dismissed on the broad ground that, on the death of her husband, the lady came under the influence of her brother-in-law, who was an interested party in all the subsequent proceedings leading up to the so-called award, whom she trusted to advise her, and on whose advice she acted, and that, in inducing her to assent to the award, he betrayed the confidence she had reposed in him. They accordingly held that the award must be treated as a nullity. (Sir John Edge.) SRI KISHAN LAL P. MUSSAMAT KASHMIRO.

-Exidence of non-consent not being satisfactory if amounts to.

The question was whether or not a compromise of a suit purporting to have been made and entered into by a purdanashin lady had in fact been so made and entered with her full knowledge and consent or the contrary.

The lady and one of her brothers practically denied that she ever consented to the compromise. No witness gave direct and positive evidence that she did consent to it. There was also no documentary evidence proving that she did so. Yet the appellate Judges considered that as the circumstantial evidence given in the case went to show that the evidence of the lady and her brother on the point was not reliable, they were therefore entitled to hold the affirmative proposition that she did give her consent to the compromise was proved.

Held, that the view of the learned Judges was erroneous and that the error was due to the fact that they dealt with the case without keeping sufficiently before their minds that an affirmative proposition was not established by showing that the evidence of witnesses who deposed to a contradic tory negative proposition was not reliable. Onus-Quantum.

Owing to the secluded life purdanashin ladies live, and the consequent inexperience in the conduct of business, legal or other, the law throws its protection around them. The strongest and most satisfactory proof ought to be gren by the person, who claims under a sale or gift from them. that the transaction was a real and bona fide one and was fully understood by the lady whose property is dealt with. It is requisite that those who rely upon deeds executed by such ladies should satisfy the Court that they have been explain ned to and understood by those who executed them. In the case of an agreement to compromise litigation, it is sufficient cient to show that the general result of the compromise, distinct from the details and legal technicalities involved

Held, that nothing of the kind was shown in the case before their Lordships in which the question was whether or not a compromise of a suit purporting to have been made and entered into by the appellant, a purdanashin lady, had in fact been so made and entered with her full knowledge and consent or the contrary. In a case in which the question was whether or not a compromise of a suit purporting to have been made and entered into by the appellant, a purdanashin lady, had in fact been so made and entered into with her full knowledge and consent or the contrary, the appellant distinctly denied that she ever consented to the compromise. The vakils engaged on opposite sides in the suit were examined, and their evidence, put at the highest, showed that the appellant's brothers had an opportunity of informing her of the fact that a compromise was proposed and of obtaining her consent to it, and even raised a suspicion that she was informed of it and did consent to it.

Held, that the evidence of the vakils was quite insufficient in face of the distinct denial of the appellant to establish the affirmative proposition that she did in fact consent to the compromise. (Lord Atkinson.) SRIMATI SARAT

COMPREHENSION BY HER OF.

-Proof of-Necessity-Presumption of comprehention from her having affixed her name to deed-Propriety

Undoubtedly, if a person of competent capacity signs a deed, it is to be presumed that he understood the instrument to which he has affixed his name; but in the case of a purdanashin woman, who had no legal assistance, the ordinary presumption does not arise, and it is incumbent on the Court to be satisfied, as a matter of fact, that she really did understand the instrument to which she has put her name (447). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) NAWAB SYED ASHGAR ALI P. DILRUS BANNOO REGUM. (1877) 3 Suth. 444.

-Proof of-Sufficiency of-Complex and simple dispositions-Distinction.

Evidence to establish comprehension by a purdanashin lady of a deed executed by her is most obviously found in proof that the deed was read over to the settlor and, where necessary, explained. If it is in a language which she does not understand, it must, of course be translated, and it is to be remembered that the clearness of the meaning of the deed will suffer in the process. The extent and character of the explanation required must depend on the circumstances. Length, intricacy, the number and complexity of the dispositions, or the unfamiliarity of the subject-matter, are all reasons for requiring an increased amount and efficiency of explanation. Thus a matter not likely to attract the attention of the executant in itself ought not to be relied on as binding, unless her attention had been directly drawn to it. So if the deed, as presented for execution, differs substantially, either by way of addition or of omission, from the scheme and details which the intending settlor has previously laid down, the discrepancy ought to be clearly pointed out and its nature and effect should be fully described unless, which must be rare, the difference is so obvious that even a person in the settlor's position must perceive and appreciate it for herself. If the description and explanation have been partial or erroneous, or have not been given at all, the question will then arise, as it arises where there has been no independent legal advice, whether, if proper information had been given, it would have affected the mind of the executant in completing the deed. On the other hand, the doctrine cannot be pushed so far as to demand the impossible. The mere declaration by the settlor, subsequently made, that she had not understood what she was doing obviously is not in itself conclusive. It must be a question whether, having regard to the proved personality of the setlor, the nature of the settlement, the circumstances under which it was executed, and the whole history of the parties, it is reasonably established that the deed executed was the free and intelligent act of the settlor or not. If the answer is in the affirmative, those relying on the deed have discharged the onus which rests on them. Of course fraud, duress and actual undue influence are separate matters (350-1). Deed by- (Could.)

COMPREHENSION BY HER OF-(Confd.)

Proof of Written statement filed by her referring to deed if-No contence of statement having been explained

By a trust indenture executed by a Mainomedan, he appointed his wife and her father trustees and disposed of property in her favour purporting to do so in satisfaction and discharge of her claim for the unpaid bulance of her dower. The question arose whether the contents, purport, or effect of the trust deed were ever brought to her knowledge and whether she had ever as a trustee accepted the gift purporting to be contained in it in satisfaction of her claim for the balance of her dower. In proof of that fact a written statement filed by her and her fathe; as trustees was relied upon, which written statement stated that the defendants (the lady and her father) were trustees appointed under the deed of trust, and as such held the properties described in the schedule annexed to it upon the trusts thereby created. The written statement purported to be signed twice by each of the trustees, and signed once by their attorney. Over one set of the signatures of the trustees it contained the usual declaration by the defendants that the statements contained in the document were true to their knowledge, except as to matters stated on information and belief, and as to such matters they believed them to be true. Following this was the indorsement, "Explained by me to the defendants abovenamed" signed by the attorney. The attorney was not called, and no explanation was given for his absence. And though the father of the lady, who was a purdanashin, identified his daughter's signature to the written statement, he said nothing about the document having been read and explained either to himself or to her. It appeared that the father gave instructions to the solicitor for preparing the written statement, but there was no proof whatever that he ever communicated with his daughter on the subject.

Held that it was impossible under those circumstances to accept the written statement as satisfactory proof that the contents, purport, or effect of the trust deed were ever brought to the knowledge of the lady, or that she had ever as a trustee accepted the gift purporting to be contained in it in satisfaction of her claim for the balance of her dower (224-5). -Documents subsequent purporting to be executed by her if-No proof of execution thereof by her and of her knowledge of contents thereof.

The suit was to set aside a deed of sale executed by a deceased purdanashin lady in favour of the appellant. The appellant attempted to support the validity of the deed by the evidence of proceedings which had taken place in the lifetime of the lady in rent suits, and in a suit in which there was a contest between the lady and her relatives. Documents in those suits referred to the sale; and authenticity was endeavoured to be given to the transaction in consequence of the lady herself having recognised it. But there was an entire absence of satisfactory proof that those documents, which were said to contain confirmatory evidence of the transaction, were executed by the lady, or that, if she did execute them, their contents were known to her.

DUE EXECUTION OF.

-Evidence against-Non-attestation by independent person when not.

In a case in which the question was whether a deed of gift alleged to have been executed by a purdanashin lady in favour of her daughter's orphan children was really executed by the lady, the learned Judges of the High Court who held that the deed was not really executed by the lady, mentioned as a matter of suspicion that no independent person was called in to attest that deed. It appeared that every member of the family, who could have been present and who could have attested the deed, was present and attested the deed.

Held that the objection was of no force (87-8).

It is somewhat difficult to understand what is meant by the objection that no independent person was called in to attest the deed. It has not been suggested that any member of the family or any person who would naturally have been present if the deed were genuine was absent on the occasion when it is said to have been executed. It is difficult to see what advantage would have been gained by summoning an independent person to attest the deed. The lady was a purdanashin lady. A stranger would not have been admitted to her presence. The attestation of a stranger who could not have seen her write and who could not have known her voice would have carried the matter very little further (88). (Lord Macnaghten.) MAHOMED BUKSH KHAN v. Again, when a transaction of this kind is impeached, there ought to be clear evidence not of the mere signature by the party, but that the secluded woman had the means of knowing what she was about. In such cases mere registration does not go far to corroborate the proof of the validity of the transactions, for the registration must necessarily take place under a mooktearnamah executed by the party executing the principal conveyance; and there can be, on the face of the one, no higher proof of its execution than there is of the execution of the other. Semble: when a document executed by a purdah woman is produced for registration, the Registrar must send some officer as Commissioner to the house of the lady, who, by examining her through the purdah, after satisfying himself of her identity. must obtain an acknowledgment of her signature.

Mutation of names, though a more solemn proceeding has not, if done under a mooktearnamah, the same effect against a purdah woman as it has against a person capable of transacting his own business and acting for himself (524). SYUD FUZZUL HOSSAIN P. AMJUD ALI KHAN.

EXPLANATION TO HER OF

-What amounts to.

There is a wide difference between reading out a deed, neither short nor simple, and explaining its effect. Nobody can explain the effect of a deed upon a purdanashin lady without knowing her position with respect to the various parts of the property dealt with by the deed (78).

To read a deed fluently, to read it in the usual way without stopping anywhere, is calculated to puzzle more competent persons than an illiterate purdanashin. To do so would hardly amount to explaining that deed to her (79-80). (Lord Hobbouse.) ANNODA MOHINI ROY CHOWDHRY v. BHUBAN MOHINI DEBI. (1901) 28 I. A. 71-

The lady died nearly 5 years after the sale, and the suit was instituted nearly 7 years thereafter. The plaintiff's case was that the said two deeds were either forged or were obtained from the deceased by fraud. The defendants, the alienees, admitted the original title of the deceased to the property, and rested their title to the same on the validity of the said deeds. The deeds were duly registered. Mutation of names was made in pursuance thereof; and possession and enjoyment of the property ever since the dates of the deeds was consistent with them.

INDEPENDENT ADVICE.

-Absence of Validity of deed even in case of -Conditions.

It cannot be held as an absolute rule of law that a gift by a punlanashin lady cannot stand unless it is proved that she had independent advice. The possession of independent advice, or the absence of it, is a fact to be taken into consideration and well weighed on a review of the whole circumstances relevant to the issue of whether the grantor thoroughly comprehended, and deliberately and of her own free will carried out, the transaction. If upon a review of the facts-which include the nature of the thing done and the training and habit of mind of the grantor as well as the proximate circumstances affecting the execution-the conclusion is reached that the lady would have executed the deed even if she had obtained independent advice, the deed ought to stand.

Their Lordships upheld a deed of gift executed by a purdanashin lady in favour of the legitimate son of her muktear and paramour in respect of nearly one-half of her properties, which were considerable, though there was no evidence to show that, in executing the deed, she had acted under independent advice. The case of an illiterate purdanashin lady, denuding herself of a large proportion of her property without professional or independent advice, is one on which there is much authority. Independent legal advice is not in itself essential. After all, advice, if given, might have been bad advice, or the settlor might have insisted on disregarding it. The real point is, that the disposition made must be substantially understood and must really be the mental act, as its execution is the physical act of the person who makes it. If, however, the settlor's freedom and comprehension can be otherwise established, or, if the scheme and substance of the deed were themselves originally and clearly conceived and desired by the settlor, and were then substantially embodied in the deed, there would be nothing further to be gained by independent advice. If the settlor really understands and means to make the transfer, it is not required that some one should have tried to persuade her to the contrary. (Lord Sumuer). MT. FARID-UN-NISSA E. In deciding in favour of the validity of a mortgage bond executed by a purdamashin lady in favour of her legal adviser, the trial Judge was influenced by the consideration that the relatives of the lady must have been aware of the transaction because her brother was a co-signatory of the deed, and two of her relatives were the identifying wit-

-Strict construction of deed-Necessity.

A Hindu widow, being a purdanashin lady, executed in favour of her deceased husband's divided brother, who would be entitled to succeed to the estate of her husband in her hands, after the widow's death a document whereby it was agreed that the latter should, at once take possession of the estate and pay a certain sum of money annually for the executant's maintenance during her life. The question being whether the document operated as a conveyance, held, the document having been executed by a purdanashin lady in favour of the chief male member of the family, it should receive a strict construction.

On a consideration of the whole evidence and the surrounding circumstances, the Judicial Committee held that the document did not operate as a conveyance. SOOKYA-BOYE AMMAL P. LUTCHUMI AMMAL

Having to file road-cess returns in respect of those viliages, they executed a mookhtarnama, and in that mookhtarnama there was a statement or recital that the villages were in their possession "as life interest." That recital was relied on as an admission by the widows. The widows were purdanashin ladies, and the mookhtar appointed by them was the mookhtar of the reversionary heirs.

-Inheritance-Relinquishment of-Deed of.

The deed, in short, is a deed substantially without any consideration by a pardanashin donor of her entire property in favour of a donee, who, or whose representatives, submit the prepared document to her and obtain within the parda her signature. It is the established law of India in these circumstances that the strongest and most satisfactory proof ought to be given by the person who claims under a sale or gift from them that the transaction was a real and bowa fide one, and fully understood by the lady whose property is dealt with (384).

When, however, the law is that the lady must fully understand the transaction, this is but a secondary way of saying that it is the obligation of the donee in any transaction proceeding from her to see that she does so understand it. The relations of parties demand that this duty be performed, and where courts of law declare that the onus rests upon the donee of showing that he did so, that, of course, is founded upon the fundamental fact that it was his duty to do it. If accordingly this obligation thus arising out of the relations of the parties be not fulfilled, the case for rescission and consequent remedy is clear (384-5).

Applying the above principles, their Lordships reversed the judgment of the High Court, and restored that of the Sub-Judge declaring invalid a deed by which the plaintiff was alleged to have relinquished all her rights in respect of her inheritance (385). Legal adviser — Mort gage in favour of.

We have a case of the legal adviser to a purdanathin woman acting the part of money-lender to her, and procuring the execution by her of a mortgage bond to secure its repayment. It is difficult to conceive a case in which the court would be entitled, and indeed obliged, to examine the transaction with closer scrutiny, or to insist more sternly on the mortgagee supporting the heavy onus of showing that the client was fully aware of the meaning and effect of the deed, and that the transaction was a fair and honest one.

Held, that the appellants (who represented the mortgagee) entirely failed to support either of those issues.

Held further, on the evidence, that the terms of the mortgage bond were extortionate, and that the lady, the mortgagor, did not understand the effect of the deed by reason of its not having been adequately explained to her. The deed was therefore held to be void and unenforceable against her. (Lord Moulton.) LALA MAHABIR PERSHAD P. MUSSAMMAT TAJ BEGAM.

Managing agent—Voluntary conveyance in fatour

Rani S was a lady 65 years of age and comparatively illiterate, and she had no adviser or counsellor except D, who had great influence over her. S executed a deed or will in 1865 in favour of D. The deed at first provided that the lady set apart 29 villages of her patrimony, producing a rental of Rs. 9,993 a year, to defray the expenses of her tomb and that of her deceased husband. It, however, went on to say that D, her managing agent, should have the management of the endowment in perpetuity, generation after generation, and that under every circumstance he should have full power for good or evil. D thus became facts of the case it appeared that a comparatively small portion of that large fund could be annually allocated to the expenses of the tomb, and that a large surplus would each year remain in his hands.

In a suit by the son of D for a declaration of right to possession of the villages conveyed by the deed, held that D certainly filled such a position towards S, as to render it incumbent upon him to show that he had made a proper use of the confidence reposed in him by her, and that the execution of the document granted without any valuable consideration and from which he obtained important pecuniary benefit, was free from all attempt at undue influence

Every onus is thrown upon a person who fills such a character as D did, of shewing conclusively that the transaction was an honest one, and a bona fide one, as to which a woman in the position of S, had some independent advice, or some opportunity of knowing exactly what she was about and in which she was not under the complete influence of her manager (148).

Held, further that the plaintiff had not discharged the onus which lay upon him, that all the facts of the case went to show that there was active undue influence, and that the instrument was bad ab initio (148). (Lord Morris.) Wajid Khan v. Raja Ewaz Ali Khan.

-Mookhtar-Sale deed of entire property in favour of. A deceased lady executed a deed of sale in favour of the appellant, who, on some occasions, had acted as her mooktear (man of business). The lady was a pordanashin, living apart from her relations; whether in the house of the appellant or not was not distinctly proved, but certainly in a place where she was without those natural advisers which a lady, when she was going to fact with apparently the whole of her property, ought to have around her. She, whilst thus alone and unprotected, executed the deed in question in favour of the appellant.

In a suit by the heirs of the lady to set aside the deed, held that, according to the principles which had always guided the courts in dealing with sales or gifts made by ladies in such a position, the strongest and most satisfactory proof ought to be given by a person who claimed under a sale or gift from them that the transaction was a real and bonu fide one, and fully understood by the lady whose property was dealt with (206-7).

Held further that the appellant, far from discharging such onus, failed to produce even that evidence which clearly was within his power, and which ought to have been given even in an ordinary case of a sale that is at all impeached (207). -Religious trust-Deed dedicating entire property to. The effect of a deed purporting to have been executed by a pardanashin lady was to devote all the property which the lady possessed to religious uses, to destroy her rights as proprietor, and to constitute her one only of the muttawallis for the management of the endowment, giving her 3/28 parts of the income of the whole property only for her management. The deed was written in a language which the lady did not understand. Her case was, that although she executed the instrument, its contents were not explained to her, and that she was ignorant that its effect would be that set out above.

A mutation of names from her own name alone to her own and another's name as mutwalis was effected; but the mooktarnamah was not proved. The estates also were afterwards described in several documents as wagfnamahs, and she herself was described in many transactions relating to the estates as mutwali. Receipts for rents were given first in her own and her co-mutwali's name as mutwalis, and, after her co-mutwali's death, which happened about two years after the deed, in her own name as mutwali. Pottahs were granted in which she was so described. Suits were also brought in which she was plaintiff with a similar description. On the other hand, for more than twenty years, notwithstanding that she was nominally described in the above transactions as mutwali, she actually dealt with the property as her own. She granted mowrossee leases, sold parts, and mortgaged other parts, and in every way treated the property as her own, and as if it were not subject to a religious trust. Those acts, which extended over the whole time from the execution of the deed to the commencement of the suit strongly showed her own consciousness, that while she was described as a mutwali she really believed herself to be the proprietor and owner of the property, and had no idea that she had reduced herself to the state of a mere manager of it, entitled only to 3/28 parts of the income for her main-

The plaintiff had executed a wakfnama by which she purported to divest herself of the whole of her property, subject to a life-stipend for herself and her husband and to a right of residence in a house, and to appoint the respondents mutawallis of the wakf. She sued in substance to set aside the deed.

At the time of the execution of the deed the plaintiff was a married woman, illiterate, childless, and purdanashin. The grounds on which the plaintiff sought to have the deed set aside were (1) that she had executed it under actual undue influence of her husband, which dominated her choice and will, and (2) that, when she executed it, she had had no explanation of its nature and contents, but throughout believed it to be an instrument needed for the routine management of her estate.

It was found on the evidence that the deed was not executed under actual undue influence of the husband, and that both before its execution and also shortly after its execution when it came to be registered, its contents were read over to the plaintiff and were to some extent explained to her. The evidence also showed that the lady had herself an idea of executing a wakfnama and had given instructions for the preparation of one. The deed in question differed, however, in material respects from the one she was shown to have had in view, and there was no satisfactory evidence that her attention was pointedly drawn to the differences and that she assented to the deed with those differences.

The plaintiff claimed as muttawali under a deed of wakf by which the settlor, a deceased purdanashin lady, disposed of property of the value of about Rs. 20,000 on the terms that five months of the income should be applied for the benefit of a mosque founded by her grandfather and four-ninths of the income should be applied for the maintenance of the mutawali, who was to be herself during her lifetime and on her decease the plaintiff, who was her maternal uncle. The suit was for possession, the defendants being the lady's husband and her nearest agnate and some tenants of the property. The execution of the deed was not in question.

Held, affirming the High Court, which had reversed the trial Judge, that the validity of the deed was established.

Here is a disposition which the lady had every motive to make, benefiting natural recipients of her bounty disputed by persons, who in the circumstances had no claims upon her, and there is a body of evidence that she knew and approved of what was being done. # Gift by-Validity of-Proof of-Onus-Quantum.

Death-bed dispositson. Their Lordships have to deal with an instrument avowedly taken ex capite lecti from a woman stricken with a mortal disease, and in expectation of death-that woman being one of a class which the law regards as in need of especial protection. Whatever strictness is required in the proof of a testamentary disposition is, at least, equally required here. The document is written in a character and language which, if in the fullest possession of her faculties, she could neither read nor understand. The accounts given by the witnesses of the preparation and explanation of the deed of gift alleged to have been executed by her are inconsistent and unsatisfactory. If it were even established that the person who put her hand to the paper were the woman alleg ed to have executed the deed, the proof would still fall short of that which ought to be given to support such a transaction-proof that she really knew what she was about, and intended to make this disposition of her property (168). pleaded, inter alia, that the alleged deed of gift was either a forgery, or, having been procured from J by the fraud and contrivance of her brothers, was not an effectual disposition of the property.

M was a purdah woman, and the disposition in question was made not very long before her death, and whilst she was labouring under a mortal disorder. It was not open to the objection of inofficiousness. Her preference of her own blood relations to a son adopted by her husbond, and otherwise provided for, was not unnatural. The respondent's evidence was conflicting as to the party intended to be benefited, and left it uncertain, to say the least, what were the instructions for the deed, and from whom those instructions emanated.

Held, reversing the High Court, that evidence so untrustworthy, so uncertain, and so conflicting, was not such as to induce their Lordships to declare affirmatively that the Hibba was in any sense the act and deed of M. or even that she herself put her hand and seal to it (431-2). Lady in extremis at time of execution of deed.

The appellant claimed under a deed which on the face of it purported to be a deed of sale for Rs. 9,000 of property worth a lac of rupees. The alleged sale was by a purda-nashin lady, during a very severe and painful illness, of which she died within a few days afterwards. The vender was the niece of the lady, and the deed was prepared by the directions of the niece's husband. The first Court came to the conclusion that, treated as a sale, the deed could not stand, and set it aside. On appeal to the High Court, it was suggested that though the deed might not be good as a deed of pure sale, it would be good as a deed of hounty. the sale being colorable for the purpose of giving effect to a gift which otherwise it might be difficult to make under the Mahomedan Law. The High Court came to the conclusion that there was no evidence sufficient to satisfy the burden of proof which lay upon every person who endeavoured to sastain a deed of that kind as a deed of gift from a person in extremes where the thing had assumed on the face of it a totally different character, and where, in the first instance, it was pleaded and endeavoured to be supported as a deed of such different character.

On appeal their Lordships affirmed the judgment of the High Court. MUSSAMUT KUMUROONISSA BEGUM P. MEERZA SYUFFOOLLAH. (1871) 16 W. R. (P.C.) 32 = 2 Sar. 743.

The suit was to recover a sum of money from a purdanathin lady on foot of an account settled by her husband. The account alleged to have been so settled was in respect of a banking business. There was no evidence that the lady lad expressly authorized her husband to make such a settlement. There was no satisfactory evidence that such a business was tarried on by the lady, and certainly none that it was carried on with her knowledge and by her authority.

DAUGHTER REVERSIONER-MORTGAGE BY MOTHER-DEED VALIDATING, BY DAUGHTER EXECUTED IN FAVOUR OF HER OWN HUSBAND.

Validity of -Onus of proof of.

A person claiming under a mortgage by a Hindu wislow contended that, even if originally invalid, the mortgage was binding upon the husband's estate, because it had been validated by the daughter of the deceased by a deed subseuently executed by her and her mother, the mortgagor. The deed relied upon for validating the mortgage was a general power of attorney executed by the widow and the daughter in favour of the latter's husband, and it was urged that by that deed the daughter admitted and recognised the mortgage. There was no evidence that at the time when the general power of attorney was executed, the daughter knew anything about the mortgage. It was not shewn that she received any advice or information beyond having the deed read to her word for word.

Held that it would be against all principle if a lady so situated were held bound by such a transaction (200).

The daughter was a purdanashin lady; she had no interest in the estate other than one in expectancy; she was not dealing with a stranger but with her own husband; she was not receiving any valuable consideration. There is no evidence that she was told that the deed she executed had the effect of subjecting her expectant estate to a burden which she was gratuitously undertaking (200). (Lord Hobhouse.) The question was whether a security for £1,000 given to the appellants by a married woman for debts of her husband was impeachable by her.

The security was open to the double objection of having been obtained by a trustee from his certai que trust by pressure through her husband and without independent advice, and of having been obtained by a husband from his wife by pressure and concealment of material facts. It was also found that the document signed by the wife was very different from what she supposed it to be and a document of the true nature of which she had no conception

Held that the security could not be upheld.

Semble the security could have been upheld if the only ground for impeaching it had been that the wife had no independent advice (815). (Lord Lindley.) TURNBULL & (1902) 6 C. W. N. 809. CO. r. DUVAL.

DEED IN FAVOUR OF-EXECUTION UNDER UNDUE INFLUENCE OF.

Presumption of from non-payment of consideration -Propriety-Lady of capacity-Execution with comprehension proced-I'ndue influence not pleaded and not raised on issues or evidence.

In a suit instituted by the heirs of a deceased purdanashin lady to recover possession of villages conprised in a sale-deed executed by her in favour of the appellant, her husband, on the ground that she did not execute the deed with a full comprehension of its nature and effect, the High Court agreed in the findings of fact by the Sub-Judge that the lady was not as alleged intoxicated at the time of verification of the sale-deed, that she was a woman capable of managing her affairs and that she did in fact manage them. that she un loobtedly executed by her own hand the sale deed in question, but that no part of the consideration for the sale was paid to her by the appellant. The High Court thought that in the circumstances there was a presumption of undue influence on the part of the appeilant, and that he ought to have shown that the old lady had independent advice and thoroughly understood what she was doing. The High Court accordingly set aside the transaction altogether.

Their Lordships doubted whether that was right or altogether consistent with the previous findings by the Court

There is no case of undue influence made by the plaintiffs in their plaint or raised in the issues on which the case was tried; and there is no evidence that Rs. 30,000 was an inadequate price, or that the sale was an improvident one if the price had been paid (144). After the death of M. the plaintiffs, claiming to be her sisters, sued the appellant for possession of, inter alia, the villages comprised in the said sale deed and, in the event of the appellant proving the sale of the two villages to be genuine, for recovery of the sale consideration thereof instead of possession. The plaintiffs alleged with regard to the sale deed, that it had not been executed by M with full comprehension of its nature and effect.

Both the Courts below found that the sale deed was duly executed by M with full comprehension of its nature and effect, and that no part of the consideration for the sale was proved to have been paid by the appellant to M. On those findings of fact the Sub-Judge held that the presumption was that out of affection M gave the property to the appellant as a matter of favour, and through some policy called that gift a sale. The High Court dissented from that view.

Their Lordships agreed with the High Court (143-4). There is no evidence of any intention to make a gift, and there is no suggestion in the pleadings that the villages had been given to the appellant, or that his wife intended to remit to him or release him from payment of any part of the purchase-money. From the findings on the evidence it must be presumed that M intended to pass the property for some purpose, and as the suggestion of a gift is excluded the deed must operate (if at all) according to what it purports to be, namely, a sale (144). #### TRANSFER TO-VALIDITY OF.

Issue as to-Exidence-Examination by lady of herself-Failure of, when immaterial.

In a case in which the question was as to the validity of transfers of Government paper by a purdanashin lady to her husband, the lady did not examine herself. The question was whether and to what extent her failure to examine herself affected her case. Their Lordships observed as follows :-

It would, doubtless, have been more satisfactory if the respondent had thought fit to support her claim by her own testimony. Her abstaining from so doing certainly affords an objection to her case deserving of serious consideration; and their Lordships do not think that it is altogether removed by the suggestion of the strong repugnance felt by native females in the respondent's position to taking such a step. But the objection, though it may weaken, does not destroy the case made by the respondent; and their Lordships are of opinion that, whatever weight may be due to it, it is quite insufficient to affect the conclusions in her favour to be drawn from the facts and circumstances of the case, which have been already adverted to (595). (Sir James W. Colvile.) MOONSHEE BUZLOOR RUHEEM v. SHUMSOON-(1867) 11 M. I. A. 551= NISSA BEGUM. 8 W. R. (P. C.) 3=2 Suth. 59=2 Sar. 259.

In a suit by a Mahomedan woman against her husband to recover the value of Company's paper and real and personal estate, the plaint alleged that such paper being her separate property, had been, as she lived in seclusion, indorsed and handed over by her to her husband for the pur pose of receiving the interest thereon. The defence of the husband was that he had purchased such paper from his wife, and on the indorsement and delivery had paid the full value to his wife, who had appropriated the proceeds to her own use. Admittedly she came to his house a wealthy woman and left it almost destitute.

Held, that transactions of such nature and magnitude between husband and wife, with such a result, required a full and clear explanation on the part of the former, supported by such evidence as would satisfy a Court of Justice that they were conducted fairly and properly, and with a due regard to the rights and interests of the wife (584).

The principle of the judgments of the lower Courts is that the relation of the parties being what it was, although the wife may have failed to establish the precise case made by her, the husband was bound to show that the transactions which he set up were hone fide sales and purchases, and that he actually paid the full value for what he received from her. Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that this is a sound principle, and in accordance with the long established practice of the Courts in India.

This lady is entitled to the protection which the law gives to a purdanashin, and the burden of proving the reality and bone fides of the purchases pleaded by her husband was properly thrown on him (585.6). A.deed of mortgage of a testator's estate to secure debts for which it was liable was executed by, amongst others, two pardanashin ladies, one of whom was the widow of the testator and an executrix of the will, and the other, his daughter, who was a donee of villages from the testa-tor in his lifetime. In a suit to enforce the mortgage, the two ladies, while not denying their execution of the deed in wit, put in separate defences, each contending that she signed it without knowing what it contained, and admitted in execution before the Registrar without comprehending the real nature of the transaction. The Subordinate Judge did not keep the two defences separate; he mixed them together in one issue, and in his judgment he applied to both ladies evidence which applied to either, and found in the affirmative against both without distinction.

Held that that was a course very likely to cause error (76).

In the first place, there is direct evidence affecting the dow which does not affect the daughter. In the next the positions of the two ladies in relation to the tate were quite different. The widow was executrix, and

ATTESTATION OF DEED OF-PROOF OF, REQUIRED.

-The question was whether the mortgage bond sued upon was duly attested by at least two witnesses within the meaning of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The mortgagors were two pardanashin ladies who did not appear before the attesting witnesses, and consequently their faces were not seen by the witnesses. The two attesting witnesses, who were examined, were, however, well acquainted with the voices of the ladies. The mortgagors were, on the occasion of the execution of the mortgage deed, brought from the zenana apartments of the house in which they were to an ante-room to execute the deed. In the ante room the ladies seated themselves on the floor, and between them and these two attesting witnesses there was a chick, which was not lined with cloth, hanging in the door-way. These two attesting witnesses recognised the ladies by their voices, and deposed to the effect that they saw each lady execute the deed with her own hand, although owing to the chick they were unable to see the face of either of the ladies.

Their Lordships accepted the evidence of the two attesting witnesses as true, and held it proved that the suit mortgage deed was duly attested within the meaning of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act (167). (Sir John Edge.) PADARATH D. RAM NARAIN UPADHIA.

-Insufficiency of proof adduced-Remand by Pricy Council for fresh evidence in cone of.

In a case in which their Lordships, differing from the High Court in Calcutta, dismissed a suit to enforce a mortgage deed executed by a purdanashin lady on the ground that it was not "attested" within the meaning of S. 59 of the Transfer of Property Act, it was suggested for the appellant that the appeal should be referred back to the Court below, on the view which their Lordships took of the law (a view which was a somewhat novel one at the time the case was decided by the High Court), for the purpose of framing an issue to see whether it could be brought within the decision in 42 I. A. 163 about purdanashin ladies. Their Lordships declined to accede to the suggestion, observing :- But it is obvious that the facts, as proved here, fall far short and very remote from what was under consideration in the case to which reference has been made, and their Lordships see no justification for taking the unusual course of referring back an appeal which has been argued, and which ought prima facie to be decided upon the materials which were before the Courts below. ## Protection afforded by law to.

-Application of, to woman not belonging to that class -Propriety.

The well-known rules of law applicable to deeds executed by purdanashins are not applicable to deeds executed by women not belonging to that class. In the case of such women, it must depend in each case on the character and position of the individual woman whether those who deal with her are or are not bound to take special precautions that her action should be intelligent and voluntary and to prove that it was so in case of dispute (176).

Held, in the case of a Kashmiri woman, who was found to have been an independent woman of more than ordinary capacity for, and experience in, dealing with property, that she was not entitled to the protection which the law gave to purdanashins. -Mahemedan and Hindu women-Applicability of protection alike to.

As regards the protection afforded by law to purdanashin women and the onus thrown by it upon their husbands of proving that transactions entered into by them with their wives were conducted fairly and properly, and with a due regard to the rights and interests of the wives, it was argued that a distinction cught to be drawn between a Mahomedan and a Hindu woman, because it was said that in all that concerns her power over her property, the former is by has more independent than an English wemen of her husband.

Protection afforded by law to-(Contd.)

Held, that no such distinction ought to be drawn, and that a Mahomedan woman was entitled, equally with a Hindoo woman, to the protection which the law gives to a purdanashin (585-6).

In India the Mussulman woman of rank, like the Hindoo, is shat up in the zenana, and has no communication, except from behind the purdah, or screen, with any male persons, save a few privileged relatives or dependants; the culture of the one is not, generally speaking, higher than that of the other, and they may be taken to be equally liable to the pressure and influence which a husband may be presumed to be likely to exercise ever a wife living in such a state of seclusion (585-6). -Other party to transaction also a purdamashin lady -Applicability of protection to case of.

On the death of a Mahomedan a dispute arose between his widow and his sister as to which of them was entitled to have her name entered as proprietor in an application made to the Revenue Court for mutation of names. At the suggestion of the friends and relations of both the ladies. the matter was referred for arbitration to a common friend who gave an award. In a suit by the widow against inter alia her sister-in-law (the deceased's sister) for the recovery of her dower and her share of her husband's property as against the provisions of the award, the High Court (differing from the Court below) held the arbitration and award to be good and dismissed the suit. On appeal to the Privy Council. it was contended for the plaintiff that, she being a pardanashin lady, the onus lay on the defendants of showing that everything had been explained to her (the plaintiff), and that the same had not been discharged. In over-ruling this plea, their Lordships observed as follows:—Their Lordships have fully in view the importance of maintaining the rule which has been so often laid down as to deeds by pardamashin ladies. This, however, is not the ordinary case of a deed or contract being got from a pardanashin lady by one who had all the advantages of education and understanding on his side. The two ladies whose dispute it was were both pardanashin ladjes, and they were both counselled and assisted by their respective male relatives. It is, after all, a question of evidence, and their Lordships are satisfied that it has been shown not only that the plaintiff had had explained to her and understood that a family settlement was proposed to be carried out. by the help of the arbitrator but also that she was made aware of the solution that the arbitrator prepered.  Almirability of Accounts never confirmed and acted upon-Public documents—Accounts if, in such a case,

In a case in which the question was whether certain lands were or were not devaswam property, the Sub-Judge said that certain pymash accounts of the years 1798-9 and 1805-6, most satisfactorily shewed that the lands were devaswam property. On the face of the accounts it was stated that they were never confirmed and never acted on. In a prior sait a copy of one of those accounts was refused to one of the litigant parties, on the very ground that the account had never been confirmed, and was only granted on its being discovered that a copy had already been given to his opponent.

Held that the pymash accounts could hardly be said to be public documents at all, and that they should not have been treated as evidence (150).

The person who made those returns may have believed that the lands were devaswam property, but his statement to that effect is a mere private opinion, unless and until it is affirmed or acted on in some public way (130). - Railway-Liability of carriers by-Nature and extent of-Reason for exceptional treatment of railways.

The Indian Kailways Act, 1890, reduces the responsibility of carriers by railway to that of bailees under the Contract

RAILWAYS ACT IX OF 1890-(Contd.)

Act of 1872. But then it declares that nothing in the common law of England, or in the Carriers Act, 1865, shall affect the responsibility of carriers by railway. The reason for dealing with railways in this exceptional manner, may, perhaps, he found in the circumstance that railways in India are to a great extent in the hands of the Government, and the Government is excepted from the definition of a common carrier in the Act of 1865. The Act of 1879, which is now repealed, declared that nothing in the Carriers Act, 1865, should apply to carriers by railway. But it did not negative the application of the common law of England to such carriers. In S. 10 it spoke of "the obligation imposed on a carrier by railway by the Indian Contract Act, 1872." It did not, however, declare that that obligation was to be the measure of the liability of carriers by railway, but only that their liability was not to be reduced below that limit except in a specified manner (128). Land Acquisition Act of 1894-Fifeet.

S. 7 of the Indian Railways Act of 1890, as amended in 1896, made the powers conferred by that section subject to any enactment in force for the acquisition of land for public purposes and for companies. Held that the provisions of the Land Acquisition Act of 1894 were not so expressed as to cut down the power conferred by S. 7 of the Indian Railways Act on a railway company in India to carry a line of railway across a street, subject to the control of their powers by the Governor-General, and that accordingly the respondents had the right to construct certain lines of railway on the level across a public street vested in the appellant corporation without obtaining permission from the appellant corporation or acquiring under the Land Acquisition Act, 1894, so much of the street as was occupied by the level crossing.

The Indian Railways Act in such a case contemplates the right of the public being kept alive (Ss. 13, 14, 104). The Land Acquisition Act does not repeal these sections, and the taking of the railway on the level across a public highway is accordingly not an acquisition of immovable property within the meaning of the Act. -Risk note Form H-Goods consigned for carriage under-Destruction by fire of, while awaiting despatch-Limitation of responsibility under note if attaches to Appellant, a Commission agent, delivered on 5-2-1920 128 hales, and on 7-3-1920 162 hales of cotton at the Amaluer Station of the respondent company for transport to the appellant's business premises at Kurla. Of the 290 bales so delivered. 216 were duly put on board the respondent company's wagons and carried to Kurla, but the remaining 74 bales remained on the station platform at Amalner awaiting transport. On February 25 a fire broke out, and the 74 bales were destroyed. The question was whether, in respect of the 74 bales, the respondent company was protected from liability by the terms of a document called a " risk-note " which was in a form approved by the Governor-General in Council under the Indian Railways Act. S. 72 (2).

Appellant contended that the note, by the terms of the recital contained in it, applied to goods despatched by the sender and charged for by the railway administration at reduced rates, and that, therefore, until goods had been loaded on wagons for transport, or at all events until the railway company had given a receipt for the goods specifying that they were to be carried at the reduced rate, the risk note had no application to them, and the railway company were mere ordinary bailees of the goods. By the consignment notes signed by the appellant on the dates of the delivery of the goods he however requested the railway company to receive the goods therein described and forward them by goods train to Kurla. Further the conditions indorsed on each of the consignment notes provided that, when articles were delivered for conveyance, the responsibility of the railway for the loss, destruction or deterioration of the article should be subject to the provisions of S. 72 of the Railways Act of 1890.

Held, over-ruling the appellant's contention, that the bales in question were delivered to the railway company for carriage and were so accepted, and that consequently the responsibility of the railway company for each parcel of goods accrued forthwith on the delivery of the goods and the acceptance of such delivery-and accordingly that the risk note attached to them immediately on such delivery and acceptance. The freedom of a Railway company to stipulate for its non-liability for injury arising from negligence in the execution of its contract to carry has been restricted in Canada by the Railway Act. Under S. 340 of that Act no contract restricting liability for carriage is to be valid unless it is of a kind approved by the Railway Hoard, which is empowered to determine the extent to which such fiability may be impaired, restricted, or limited, and generally to prescribe by regulation the terms and conditions under which any traffic may be carried. Standard and special freight tariffs are to be filed with the Board and to be subject to its approval, and are to be published, and made open to the inspection of the public at the railway companies' stations and officers. Under the Act, the companies are, by S. 284, put under a general obligation to carry and deliver with due care and diligence, and any one aggrieved by a breach of this duty is to have a right of action, from which the companies are not to be relieved by any notice, condition, or declaration if the damage arises from negligence or omission. If the contract between the passenger and the Railway company is one which deprives the passenger of the benefit of a duty of care which he is prima facie entitled to expect that the company has accepted, the latter must discharge the burden of proving that the passenger assented to the special term imposed. This may be shown to have been done either in person or through the agency of another. Such agency will be held to have been established when he is shown to have authorised, antecedently or by way of ratification, the making of the contract under circumstances in which he must be taken to have left everything to his agent. In such a case, it is sufficient to prove that he has been content to accept the risk of allowing terms to be made without taking the trouble to learn what was being agreed to (909-10).

The company may infer his intention from his conduct. If he stands by under such circumstances that it will naturally conclude that he has left the negotiation to the person who is acting for him, and intends that the latter should arrange the terms on which he is to be conveyed, he will be precluded by so doing from alleging afterwards want of authority to make any such terms as the law allows. Moreover, if the person acting on his behalf has himself not taken the trouble to read the terms of the contract proposed by the company in the ticket or pass offered, and yet knew that there was something written or printed on it which might contain conditions, it is not the company that will suffer by the agent's want of care. The agent will, in the absence of something misleading done by the company, be bound, and his principal will be bound through him. To hold otherwise would be to depart from the general principles of necessity recognised in other business transactions, and to render it impracticable for Railway companies to make arrangements for travellers and consignors without delay and inconvenience to those who deal with them (910). -Contract special-Passenger travelling under-Liability of company to-Measure of-Claim inconsistent with -Maintainability.

It is not accurate to speak of the right of a passenger to be carried without negligence, as if such a right existed independently of the contract between the passenger and the Railway Company and was taken away by it. The only right to be carried will be one which arises under the terms of the contract itself, and these terms must be accepted in their entirety. The company owes the passenger no Juty which the contract is expressed on the face of it to exclude, and if he has approbated that contract by travelling under it, he cannot afterwards reprobate it by claiming a right inconsistent with it. For the only footing on which he has been accepted as a passenger is simply that which the contract has defined (910). (Viscount Haldane, L. C.) GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA D. (1915) 19 C. -Duty of company to-Contract modifying-Effect

The general duty of a Railway Company to exercise care in regard to a passenger entering a train on a mere invitation or permission from the company without more, may, subject to statutory restrictions, be superseded by a specific contract which may either enlarge, diminish, or exclude it. If the law authorises it, such a contract cannot be pronounced to be unreasonable by a Court of Justice. The specific contract, with its incidents either expressed or attached by law, becomes in such a case the only measure of the doties between the parties, and the passenger cannot by any device of form get more than the contract allows him (909). Injury to-Negligence of Company-Injuries not due to-Proof of-Quantum.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the respondent against the appellants, a Railway Company, claiming damages in respect of injuries which he suffered in consequence of the appellant's train in which he was a passenger being derailed and wrecked. He alleged that the accident was due to the negligence of the appellants or their servants. The accident was caused by a length of rail of about 36 feet having been removed from the railway line.

The appellants denied the alleged negligence; stated that the derailment was caused by the malicious and criminal act of some person or persons unknown in removing the rail; and submitted that even if such persons were in the employment of the company the removal was not done in the course of their employment and that the appellants were not liable.

Held, restorting the trial judge, that the appellants had discharged the onus which lay opon them of proving that the respondent's injuries were not due to the appellant's negligence. (Lord Sumner.) EAST INDIAN RAILWAY (1919) 48 C. 757= CO. P. KIRKWOOD.

- Discretion of Court-Permanent appointment-Appointment for as long as necessary after decree.

It is within the discretion of a court appointing receiver in a suit to order that the office should continue permanently after the decree, when such continuance is necessary, or for so long as it may be so.

A decree of the High Court declared it to be necessary that a permanent appointment should be made of a receiver and manager of the estate ailotted by the Government to the family of the deceased Maharajah of Tanjore, and directed that fresh appointments to the receivership should be made from time to time, as occasion might require during the life of the senior widow, under whose management the estate had originally been placed, and the lives of the co-widows surviving her, or so long as the court might consider necessary, held, that the decree was not in variation of the judgment which it purported to follow; that the court had a discretion to make such an order when necessary for the preservation of the estate; and that so doing was in accordance with the practice, there being nothing to prevent the court from giving the management to the senior widow living at the time, if she should he fit to manage the estate on behalf of all interested in it. An order for the interim appointment of a receiver is discretionary, and the discretion is, in the first instance, that of the Court in which the suit itself is pending. When the order of that Court is altered on appeal it becomes necessary to consider whether the Court below had before it the evidence required to support such an order and considered it in accordance with the principles on which judicial discretion must be exercised. If the Court of review rightly concludes that proper discretion was not used below, it is free to exercise its own discretion in the matter. (Viscount Summer.) BENOY KRISHNA MUKERJEE v. Order an-Appeal to Privy Council against-Right

As a general rule and in the absence of special circumstances or some unusual occasion for its exercise, the power of making interlocutory orders is one which is not a suitable subject for review. Not only are the practice of the Court and the manner in which experience has shown that it is wise to apply it, better known to the High Coarts in India than they can be to their Lordships, but the delay occasioned by taking this addditional appeal adds gravely to the procrastination, which is already the bane of Indian litigation.

-Points to be considered on.

On an interim application for a receivership the coart has to consider whether special interference with the possession of a defendant is required, there being a well-founded fear that the property in question will be dissipated, or that other irreparable mischief may be done unless the court gives its protection. It appears to be extravagant to suggest that the court which has appointed a receiver has not ample jurisdiction, without the aid of a pending process, to require accounts from their own officer, to permit parties interested to intervene in the examination of these accounts, to make just allowances to their officer for his administration, and to deal with all questions of costs connected with the investigation of his accounts, as between him and any parties interested who may be allowed to appear and take part in it (2067). ## Proceedings against—Leave of appointing Court for.

-Necesity

According to the rules of a Court of Equity, no proceedings could be taken against the sequestrator except by leave of the Court. Where the property is in the custody of the Court, as when in the possession of a Receiver, the course pursued in our Courts, if it appears there is a legal title, has been to permit an action of ejectment to be brought, to put the matter in the most convenient course of determination. It was laid down in Angel v. Smith that the possession of Receivers and sequestrators is not to be disturbed without leave. When a party is prejudiced by having a Receiver put in his way, the course has been either to give him leave to bring an action of ejectment, or permit him to be examined, pro interests suo (44-5). Held, that the subsequent consent order did not abolish or abrogate the powers contained in the prior order, that the two orders must be read together, and that, in particular, under the terms "realization, management, protection," etc., of the properties, a power of sale was not taken away from but was still vested in the Receiver (290).

A realization by sale of any of the properties under mortgage is not ultra virca, but intra virca of the Receiver. He may decline to put the properties to sale, and it is for him to consider carefully the result of putting blocks of property on the market. But if, in his view, a sale would be, in certain conjectures of circumstances of advantage, then he might, with the necessary sanction well exercise his power of sale accordingly (249). The order does not mean that even contrary to the receiver's own ideas of prudence, the power of sale must be exercised; and that, if it is not exercised at once or promptly, then the basis of the receivership has gone and it ought to be declared at an end. (Lord

That property had previously been possessed by the appellant under an arrangement with the judgment-debtors that he should be debited with a certain sum per annum in respect thereof. Alleging that the rental of the property had far exceeded the sum so fixed, the respondent sued the appellant for recovery of Khas possession of the said property, and for an account of all his collections from the same.

Held, affirming the High Court, that the respondent was entitled to recover khas possession of the property and to administer and manage the same as part of the estate under his charge. "Title proper of -Prefixing of "Honorable" to

The question was whether, in an indictment which was preferred in the Recorder's Court, at Bombay, the offence was sufficiently and properly alleged to have arisen within the jurisdiction of that Court. The indictment itself was headed" In the Court of the Honorable The Recorder of Bombay," and the offence was charged to have been committed "within the jurisdiction aforesaid." It was said that the title of the Court was not correctly described, the proper title being "the Recorder of Bombay," and not of the Honorable The Recorder of Bombay.

Held, over-ruling the objection, that by the Charter, the name given to the Court was," the Court of the Recorder of Bombay," and that prefixing to it, the word " Honorable," could not make it less the Court of the Recorder (370). -Effect-English and Irish systems-Law in India -Distinction.

In England two systems of registration of deeds exist, one in the County of Middlesex and the other in the County of York. With regard to the former, non-registration avoids the unregistered deed as against a subsequent holder of a registered document, but leaves the deed good as between grantor and grantee and as between the grantor and his creditors. The Yorkshire system, though in form compulsory, also effects its purpose by giving priority to deeds according to the date of entry on the register. Neither of these systems affects the liability of the grantor upon the deed. In Ireland the system is slightly different, for by the Statute 6 Anne, c. 2 (Ir.), non-registration in that country not only makes the deed void as against subsequent registered holders, but also as against creditors. There is no pro-(1858) 7 M. I. A. 207 (223). Vision in any of these Acts corresponding to that to be found in the Indian Registration Act of 1877, which destroys the whole effect of the transaction as against immoveable property and renders the document incapable of use in any proceedings by which such property is affected or in the Transfer of Property Act, which wholly avoids an unregistered mortgage for a sum exceeding Rs. 100 (245-6).

The main differences between the system of registration in India and the systems in England and in Ireland are these; that in India non-registration in certain cases has the effect of rendering the registered document ineffectual even as between grantor and grantee and excludes it from evidence. Both in England and in Ireland it has no such effect. This is sometimes stated by saying that in India registration is compulsory and here permissive; but the true difference is better expressed as it has already been stated (253), (Lord Buckmaster.) The registration of a deed is mainly required for the purpose of giving notoriety to the deed, and it is required under the penalty that the deed shall not be given in evidence unless it be registered. If it be registered, the party who has presented it for registration is then under the Act in a position which prima facie at least entitles him to give the deed in evidence (175). (Sir Montague E. Registered deed-Holder of - Notice of prior un-registered deed-Effect-England and India-Distinction. The real purpose of registration is to secure that every person dealing with property, where such dealings require registration, may rely with confidence upon the statements contained in the register as a full and complete account of all transactions by which his title may be affected unless indeed be has actual notice of some unregistered transaction which may be valid apart from registration. In England such notice would prevent the registered document having priority over that which was unregistered. In India this would not be the result if it were a mortgage for over Rs. 100 or if the unregistered document was one brought within the provisions of S. 49 of the Registration Act. On 25.9-1873 N. F. & Co. executed a deed of conveyance in favour of A of immoveable property of more than the value of Rs. 100. That deed was not registered, and was not therefore admissible in evidence. On 31-12-1878 another deed of conveyance was executed by N. F. & Co. in favour of A in respect of the same property. That deed referred to the deed of 1873, which was set out in a schedule as part of the deed of 1878. The deed of 1878 was registered, and the memorandum of registration was written, not on the first sheet of the deed of 1878 but at the end of the deed which was annexed as a schedule to, and was consequently part of, the deed of 1878. The deed of 1878 not only confirmed the deed of 1873, but it went on to state that the parties to the deed did, and each of them did, " according to their and his respective estates and interests, grant, convey, assign, and confirm unto the said A, his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, the piece or parcel of land" conveyed thereby.

REGISTRATION ACT.

Object of, as regards real property.

The Registration Act was not passed to avoid the mischief of allowing a man to be in possession of real property without having a registered deed, but as a check against the production of forgsd documents, and in order that subsequent purchasers, or persons to whom subsequent conveyances of property were made; should not be affected by previous conveyances unless those previous conveyances were registered. The Registration Act, as regards real property, was not intended to be a clause similar to that which is in the Bankrupt and Insolvent Acts, by which persons who are allowed to be in the order and disposition of goods, with consent of the real owners, are, as against creditors, to be considered the real owners (156-7). ## REGISTRATION ACT XIX OF 1843.

S. 2-Registered deed-Priority of.

-Deprivation of-Grounds.

A registered deed cannot be deprived of the priority given by Act XIX of 1843, unless it be both alleged and proved that there was fraud on the part of the grantee (228). (Lord Justice Turner.) SREENAUTH BHUTTACHARJEE P. RAMCOMUL GUNGOPADYA. (1865) 10 M. I. A. 220 = 3 W. R. P. C. 43-1 Suth. 600-2 Sar. 121.

-Fraud-Deed tainted by.

The proviso in S. 2 of Act XIX of 1843 is, that the authenticity of the deed be established to the satisfaction of the Court. The word " authenticity " would seem, according to its natural meaning, to point merely at the exclusion of a forged deed from the benefit of the Act; but their Lordships think that it could not be intended by the Act that a deed which was tainted by fraud, although in other respects genuine, should be placed on the same footing as an honest and bona fide deed. They are not disposed so to construe the Act (228). (Lord Justice Turner.) SREE-NAUTH BHUTTACHARJEE :. RAMCOMUL GUNGOPADYA (1865) 10 M. I. A. 220 = 3 W. R. P. C. 43 =

1 Suth. 600 = 2 Sar. 121. -Unregistered deed-Priority as against-Notice or knowledge thereof by holder of registered deed-Effect-Mortgage, sale, gift-Dreds of-Distinction between.

The question is whether the words at the close of S. 2 of Act XIX of 1843," any knowledge or notice of any such unregistered deed or certificate alleged to be had by any party to such unregistered deed or certificate notwithstanding", are to be construed as referring only to the mortgages and certificates mentioned in that part of the enactment which immediately precedes these words, or are to be taken to extend also to the deeds of sale or gift which are mentioned in the earlier part of the enactment. Their Lordships are of opinion that upon the true construction of the Act the words mentioned apply not only to deeds and certificatas of mortguge, but also to deeds of sale or gift (226-7).

This enactment, although divided into two branches, in consequence of the different effect which is given to it as to deeds of sale and of mortgage, was plainly intended to be a general enactment. The words we are considering are words of reference, and the terms used being general and comprehensive, their Lordships see no reason for confining their operation to one branch of the enactment rather than extending it to both. Had it been intended that they should be so confined there would have been no difficulty in expressing that intention. It would be difficult to find any reason why, in the case of a mortgage, priority should be given to a registered over an unregistered deed, notwithstanding knowledge or notice of the unregistered deed by the registered mortgagee, but in the case of a sale the priority of an unregistered deed over a registered deed should be retained, in cases of knowledge or notice, by the registered vendee or donee. The too common practice in India of setting up forged and fraudulent deeds, and the security against this practice which is afforded by registration, are quite sufficient to account for this enactment extending both to sales and mortgages, and the policy of such enactments is not unknown in other countries. The Irish Registration Acts afford an instance of it. (227-8.) (Lord Justice Turner.) SREENAUTH BHUTTACHARJEE v. (1865) 10 M. I. A. 220 = KAMCOMUL GUNGOPADYA. 3 W. R. P. -Registration-Necessity-Lease if "pottah" under S. 3 of Madras Rent Recovery Act of 1865-Validity of lease against succeeding Zemindar-S. 11 of Rent Recovery Act-Effect.

A document of 1867, purporting to be a lease from the late Zemindar of Ramnad to the appellant's father ran as follows:-In consideration of the assistance you have rendered to this samastanam (zemindar), you requested that the kasba (chief) village of S should be leared to you for 50 years fixing a favourable poruppu-"The aforesaid S village "-Describing it-" Has been accordingly leased to you for forty years from this Fusli 1276 up to Fusli 1315, fixing the poruppu at Rs. 400 per annum. You shall, therefore, raise the required crop and enjoy; and, agreeably to the kararnama (agreement) you have given, you shall continue to pay the fixed poruppu according to the instalments of kist year after year.

It was found that the value of the village S was Rs. 1,700 per annum, so that the lease was obviously a favourable lease, which was intended to confer a valuable interest on the lessee.

Held, that the document was not a puttah within the meaning of S. 3 of Madras Act VIII of 1865; that it was not therefore excluded from the operation of S. 17 of the Registration Act of 1866; and that, being unregistered, it was inadmissible in evidence for the purpose of affecting the estate (174-5).

Quaere whether, assuming the document was a puttah within the meaning of S. 3 of Madras Act VIII of 1860, the proviso to S. 11 of that Act would not nullify its effect as regards the "successor" of the grantor (175.6). -Order rejecting-Review of- Jurisdiction.

An order rejecting an application for registration under the Registration Act of 1871 is so far in the nature of a decree within the meaning of C. P. C. of 1859 as to fall within the operations of the sections of that code permitting a review of a decree. Even otherwise, S. 38 of the amending Act of 1861 which expressly makes applicable to a proceeding to compel, registration under the Registration Act the whole procedure of the C. P. C. of 1859, includes the power of admitting a review (226-7). (Sir James W. Colvele.) REASUT HOSSEIN v. HADJEE ABDOOLLAH.

-Application for registration-Order rejecting-Ap. real from.

The question was raised whether under S. 76 of the Registration Act of 1871 (of which the final words are, "no appeal lies from any order made under this section," order against which no appeal can be preferred must not be taken to mean only one by which the judge directs the registrar to register a deed, and whether there may not be an appeal from an order rejecting the application for registration.

Their Lordships would have great difficulty in saying that an order of rejection does not fall within the term "an order made under this section"; because if the judge does not make his order of rejection under S. 76, it is difficult to see what other section gives him jurisdiction to make it. It is not, however, necessary to decide the question (225-6). (Sir James W. Colvile.) REASUT HOSSEIN v. HADJEE AB-(1876) 3 I. A. 221 = 2 C. 131 (137) = DOOLLAH. 26 W. R. 50 = 3 Sar. 641.

The question was whether a tenancy of land created in or about the year 1871 was a permanent tenancy or a tenancy at will. -An agreement for the sale of immoveable property for a sum of Rs. 10,000, recited, inter alia, that the vendor had received Rs. 1,000 out of the Rs, 10,000 by way of earnest money, that he would complete the sale within a specified period, and receive the balance before the Sub-Registrar at the time of the completion of the sale and registration, that the vendee had been put in possession of the land sold, and that the vendor should pay Rs. 1,000 by way of damages to the vendee, if he failed to complete the sale within the period specified. The vendor refused to complete the purchase, whereupon the vendee instituted a suit for specific performance.

Held that, assuming that the agreement was an agreement to sell, and not a sale, and was consequently exempted under S. 17 (2) (v) of the Registration Act of 1908, yet, as the buyer had paid earnest money exceeding the sum of Rs. 100, and, so far from refusing to accept delivery, was pressing for specific performance, the agreement did in itself by virtue of S. 55 (6) ( $\delta$ ) of the Transfer of Property Act create an interest, and therefore did not allow of the application of S. 17 (2) (v) of the Registration Act, that it was 42 A. 609 (616-8.) therefore, compulsorily registrable under S. 17 of that Act,

Held, agreeing with the Sub-Judge, and differing from the High Court, that the document of the 18th June, 1918 (the terms of which are fully set out in their Lord-hipjudgment), was a sale deed requiring registration under S. 17 of the Registration Act, and not a mere agreement for sale.

The language employed is perhaps not that of a trained draftsman, but the document clearly purports to transfer the executant's interest in the immoveable properties which he had inherited from his brother, particulars of which are set out in the schedule. (Sir George Lewonder.) Skinner v. Skinner. (1929) 56 I. A. 363 = 33 C. W. N. 1150 = 30 L. W. 451 = (1929) M. W. N. 676 =

Deal itself effecting a, and also providing as an integral part of transfer for execution of registered dead—Registration of—Necessity.

An unregistered deed executed by a vendor in favour of a vendee, in addition to creating an interest in the immoveable property concerned, provided as one of its terms, and therefore as an integral part of the transfer, that the vendor should, if the vendee so required, execute a registered sale deed.

Held that to allow the vendee to sue for specific performance of that agreement, putting the deed in evidence in proof of it, would clearly be within the prohibition of S 49 of the Registration Act.

An agreement for the sale of immoveable property is a transaction "affecting" the property within the meaning of the section, inasmuch as, if carried out, it will bring about a change of ownership. The intention of the Act is shown by the provision of S. 17 (2) (v), which exempts from registration, and therefore frees from the restriction of S. 49 a document which does not itself create an interest in immoveable property, but merely creates a right to obtain another document which will do so. In the face of this provision, to allow a document which does itself create such an interest to be used as the foundation of a suit for specific performance appears to be little more than an evasion of the Act. — Registration of — Necessity — Judicial proceeding — Portion of compromise incorporated into — Portion not so incorporated — Distinction.

A suit to recover land A was compromised, the arrangement being embodied in two deeds, the one being a razinama, and the other an agreement. By the agreement it was agreed that the defendant should have and retain onehalf of land A and one-half of land B which had been excluded from the suit. The agreement dealt with immoveable property beyond the value of Rs, 100 but was not registered. In the body of the razinama which was also unregistered the parties described land A and stated that they were to take it in equal moities. Under the heading of remarks, the razinama referred to the agreement and to the fact that land B was divided between the parties into equal The razinama also included land B in its schedule. In the judgment delivered in the soit, the judge, having the razinama before him, treated the first part of it (the part dealing with land A) as the only portion of the contents of the document with which he was desired by the parties to deal. In giving effect to its terms, the Judge observed that the parties had put in a razinama in respect to land A and that a decree in its terms had been passed. The judge plainly did not understand that he was asked by the parties either to consider or to give effect to the terms of the compromise which the parties narrated, by way of remark, that they had made with respect to land B. Accordingly, the order passed by him did not include and had no reference to land B. The parties obtained possession in pursuance of the compromise and enjoyed the lands falling to their shares.

In a suit subsequently brought for the recovery of land B by one of the parties to the prior suit who would be entitled to it but for the compromise embodied in the agreement and in the razinama from the other party to that suit, held that, though the razinama was not registered, yet, in so far as it was submitted to and was acted upon judicially by the learned judge in the prior suit, it was in itself a step of judicial procedure not requiring registration; and any order pronounced in terms of it constituted res judicata binding upon both the parties, who gave consent to it.

Held further, as regards land B, that inasmuch as the compromise was not submitted to the learned judge in the prior suit, but was deliberately left by the parties to stand upon their agreement, and that agreement was unregistered, the agreement conferred no title on the defendant.

The razinamah merely referred, by way of remark, to land B; and the judge was only asked to give effect to a compromise which related to land A. The order, accordingly, merely concerns the latter, and has no reference whatever to land B. So far as regarded land B, the compromise was not submitted to the learned judge, but was deliberately left by the parties to stand upon their unregis tered agreement. (Lord Watson.) PRANAL ANNEE P. Presentation for registration within four months-Registration after expiry of that period-Validity of.

Though the Registration Act of 1866 makes it imperative to present an instrument for registration within four months from the date of its execution, no time is fixed within which a deed presented and accepted for registration must be registered.

A deed of sale presented for registration to the proper officer within the period allowed for the purpose was, in consequence of the failure of the vendors to appear not withstanding a summons issued for their appearance, registered on the strength of other evidence of due execution. The registration was held to be invalid in a suit brought for the purpose by the attaching decree-holders of the vendors. The senders again applied to the registering officer to have their deed registered, but that application was refused. Thereupon they petitioned the High Court, who held that the vendees were entitled to have the deed registered, and directed its registration in the proper manner after the usual inquiries. More than 30 days after the order of the High Court, the vendees petitioned the registrar that the surviving vendors and the heirs of the deceased vendors might be summoned, and the deed registered according to the requirements of the law. Thereupon compulsory process was issued, and the deed was registered.

Held that the subrequent registration of the deed was valid and effectual to render the deed admissible in evidence and operative (217-8). (Sir Barnes Peacock.) SAH MUKHUN LALL PANDAY P. SAH KOONDUN LALL,

A fictitious entry as to a parcel in a mortgage deed intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact exists is a fraud on the registration law, and no registration obtained by means thereof is valid (120). ——By S. 28 of the Indian Registration Act, 1877, every instrument which by S. 17 of that Act is required to be registered must be presented for registration in the subdistrict within which the whole or a portion of the property affected is situate.

A mortgage bond for Rs. 8,000 was registered in the Mozufferpur district. The only property within that dis-rict which the bond purported to mortgage was a one-kauri share in the village. That kauri share belonged to a third party, and the mortgagor, who wanted to register the mortgage bond in Mozufferpur in order to complete the transaction quickly, but had no property in that district, asked the third party to sell to him the said share on receipt of a sum of Rs. 50. It was allegad that the third party accordingly sold the share to the mortgagor by a kobala, but it was admitted that the same was not registered and that there was no delivery of possession of the said share to the mortgagor. It was found that none of the parties ever intended that the said kauri share should vest in the mortgagor (all that was wanted being the use of the name of the said share for the purposes of registration, and Rs. 50 being paid to the third party only for that use) or that it should pass by the mortgage from the mortgagor to the mortgagee. Held that the said share was a fictitious entry and that such an entry intentionally made use of by the parties for the purpose of obtaining registration in a district where no part of the property actually charged and intended to be charged in fact existed was a fraud on the registration law, and that the registration obtained by means thereof was not valid.

Their Lordships' judgment rests on the view that none of the parties ever intended that the one-kauri share should vest in the mortgager or should pass by the mortgage from him to the mortgagee. This case differs toto coelo from the case suggested in argument of a more failure to make a good title to property dealt with by the instrument, and which both parties had intended should form part of the security (133). ## S. 28-Property in several sub-districts.

Deed affecting—Registration, in sub-district where smaller and less valuable portion of property is situate—Validity.

In this case the High Court held:—"In a case, like the present, in which there is a large and valuable property in one sub-district, and another small piece of land situate at a distance, it seems to us that to allow registration of a document affecting both properties in the place where the smaller and less valuable is situate would be inconsistent with the implied intention of the Legislature that registration should be made with reference to the locality of the property." The High Court accordingly held that a literal interpretation of the terms of S. 28 of the Registration Act of 1871 ought not to be adopted, and that it was the intention of the Legislature that the registration should take place where some substantial portion of the property was situate.

Held, that the judgment of the High Court put a construction upon S. 28 which could not be supported, and in fact imputed to the Legislature an intention which did not appear from the provisions of the Registration Act to have been their intention (15).

The words of S. 28, if we take them in their ordinary sense, certainly do not show an intention that there should be any inquiry as to whether the place where the document was registered was the place where what may be called some substantial portion of the property is situate; and an inquiry of that kind might very frequently lead to considerable difficulty. It appears to have been the intention of the Legislature that it should be sufficient that the registration be made by the parties, as is stated in S. 28, is the place where some portion of the property—not a substantial portion, but where any portion of the property is situate, leaving it to the office to do the rest (15.6). ## S. 32-Presentation for registration.

The terms of Ss. 32 and 33 of the Registration Act of 1877 are imperative, and a presentation of a document for registration by an agent who has not been duly authorised in accordance with those sections, does not give to the registering officer the indispensable foundation of his authority to register the document. His jurisdiction only comes into force if and when a document is presented to him in accordance with law (28-9).

The fact that the registering officer summons before him the executant of the deed, and obtains his consent to the registration of the deed, does not give the registering officer jurisdiction to register the deed, and his omission to notice that the power of attorney under which the agent had presented the deed for registration had not been executed or — District Judge—Bond in favour of—Presentation by clerk of Court of—Validity of registration—Obligors attending to admit execution but not joining in presentation.

A mortgage bond given by certain persons to the District Judge of V, to secure the performance of any order which His Majesty in Council night make on an appeal then pending in a suit, was presented for registration to the sub-registrar at V "by U on behalf of the Additional Judge, V," and was registered by the Sub-Registrar who gave the usual certificate of registration. U was only a clerk of the District Court.

Held, on the facts, that there was no proper presentation under S. 32 of the Registration Act of 1908, and that accordingly the registration was invalid. The bond was not presented by any person executing or claiming under it. For the District Judge was not present; and although the obligors appear to have attended for the purpose of admitting execution, they did not join in the presentation. Nor was the document presented by any agent holding a power of attorney. The only question, therefore, is whether U, who appears to have attended and presented the deed on behalf of the District Judge, can be said to have been a "representative" of the District Judge within the meaning of paragraph ( $\delta$ ) of S. 32. In their Lordships' opinion he cannot. (Victount Care.) MA SEWE MYA 2: MAUNG IIO HNAUNG.

perty was added, so as to render the deed registrable, and on that day the deed so completed was executed by the executant. Subsequently, that deed of endowment (i.e., the completed deed) was presented for registration by the same II. In the interval between the execution of the completed deed and its presentation to the registrar, the executant died. The registrar accepted the deed and registered it recording in writing that the man who had executed it and whose attorney presented it for registration was dead.

Held, that the registration was illegal and invalid (22-3). After the executant's death, the only attorney who would have had any land stand; would have been the attorney of the representative or assign of the deceased. When the completed deed was presented for registration. H was a mere volunteer. Nor is it possible to treat the action of the Registrar as compliance with the request for registration in an incomplete condition when the executant was alive, because the deed in fact had been executed afresh subsequently and it was presented afresh. Further, even assuming the continuity of the proceeding, the death of the executant brought it to an end (22-3). (Land Robertson.) MAJIBUNNISSA r. ABDUL KAHIM. (1900) 28 I. A. 15

-Unauthorized person-Presentation by-Validity of registration.

The power and jurisdiction of the Registrar only come into play when he is invoked by some person having a direct relation to the deed. It is for those persons to consider whether they will or will not give to the deed the efficacy conferred by registration. The Registrar could not be held to exercise the jurisdiction conferred on him if, hearing of the execution of a deed, he got possession of it and registered it; and the same objection applies to his proceeding at the instigation of a third party, who might be a busylody. Registration by the registrar of a deed presented by an unauthorized person is not a mere defect in his procedure only within the meaning of S. 87 of the Act, but invalidates the act of registration (22-3). ## REGISTRATION ACT XVI OF 1908-(Contd.) S. 33-Power of Attorney-(Contd.)

A power of attorney was brought to a sub-registrar on 4-11-1885 for registration and authentication by B, a servant of A. B told the sub-registrar that A was ill and that he (B) was going to deposit the commission fee and asked that the power of attorney might be registered on the spot. Two days after, i.e., on 6 11-1885, the sub-registrar went to the dwelling place of A and satisfied himself that A was ill and unable without risk or serious inconvenience to attend at the registration office. He read out the contents of the power to A, who thereupon admitted the execution and completion of the power, and asked that after registration the document might be given to D, in whose favour the power was executed. The power of attorney was a general power of attorney to D. Thereupon the sub-registrar registered the power of attorney.

Held, that the power of attorney was cluly presented for -Power of Attorney referred to in-General power registration and authenticated under S. 33 of the Registration Act. A was the real presenter of the power, and was so treated by the sub-registrar. It was probably an irregularity on the part of the sub-registrar to accept the document as presented by B, and to enter, as he ultimately did, the registration as made on 4-11-1885, instead of 6 11-1885. The presentation by B was inoperative but not injurious to the validity of any subsequent presentation (185).

As regards the point that the power was not executed before the sub-registrar as required by S. 33 of the Registration Act. it is covered by the proviso to that section, under which, if the person is ill, what the sub-registrar is to do is to satisfy himself that the power of attorney has been voluntarily executed, for which purpose he may go to the sick man's house and examine him. Validity of Presumption of, from acceptance by registrar of presentation under same-Endorsement of certificate on deed lax-Effect.

On a mortgage deed being presented for registration before a sub-registrar by a person, acting under a power of attorney from the mortgagee, the sub-registrar endorsed on the deed a certificate which stated that it was presented by the said agent on behalf of the mortgagee, "under a special power of attorney duly authenticated in this office," but did not refer to the fact that the power of attorney was executed before the Sub-Registrar.

It was contended that the pre-entation was bad because the power of attorney was not executed in the manner provided by S. 33 (a) of the  $\Lambda$ ct.

Held that there was nothing to displace the inference that the presentation was duly made, arising from the fact of its acceptance by the sub-registrar (380).

The endorsement is certainly iax in that it did not state that the power was executed befor the sub-registrar, but it is made under no statutory obligation, and it has no state-tory effect; it is only the evidence to show that the pre-ent-ation has been accepted by the sub-registrar and its acceptance by him, he being the officer whose business it is to see that all essential regulations are regarded, is prima facie evidence that the power of attorney was regular in all respects (380), (Lord Buckmaster.) # REGISTRATION ACT XVI OF 1908-(Contd.)

-Minor married woman-Gift deed in favour of-Presentation for registration of Father of minor-Right of.

A deed of gift executed in favour of a minor matried woman was presented for registration by her father and was registered. He had never been appointed her legal guardian; he was not an executant of the deed; neither was he the representative, assign or agent duly authorised on behalf of the executant. Held that the presentation by the minor's father of the deed for registration was in direct conflict with the express provisions of S. 34 of the Registration Act, that the deed was consequently never legally registered, and the registration of it, which was procured, was illegal, invalid and a pullity (581-2).

On the marriage of the minor dones her father had ceased to be her natural guardian, and, as he had never been appointed her legal guardian, he was not her assignee or representative within the meaning of S. 3 of the Registration Act of 1877. (Lord Atkinson.) PADMAVAYHI T. SRINIVASA KAMATHI.

The persons executing the document, within the meaning of S. 35 of the Registration Act of 1871 (corresponding to S. 35 of the Act of 1908) are not those who on the face of the deed are parties to it, or by whom it purports to have been executed, but those who have actually executed it (172). Execution of deed—Presumption of due, from its registration—Maxim—Omnia præsumuntur site et solemniter acta—Application of—S. 87 of Act—Effect.

The respondents urged that the conveyance in favour of the appellant was bad, because the registration was not in order in respect that the registration does not afford proper evidence of the execution by one of the signatories of the deed of transfer. Now, by S. 34 of the Registration Act, the duty of inquiring as to execution is put upon the registering officer, and by S. 35 it is provided that if he is satisfied as to various particulars he shall register the documents. The presumption from registration of omnia presumentur rite et selemniter acta would apply, but the matter is finally set at rest by S. 87 of the Act, which provides that "nothing done in good faith pursuant to the Act by any registering officer shall be deemed invalid merely by reason of any defect in his appointment or procedure. In a case in which a document was executed by an agent purporting to act under a power of attorney, held that if the execution of the deed on the part of the principal was validly acknowledged before the Registrar, the non-production of the power of attorney held by the agent was immaterial, since the admission of the principal that he was bound by the deed, as executed, would cover both the signature and the power of attorney to sign. -Person executing-Meaning of - Person actually ngning if confined to.

It is contended that, in the words " the persons executing the document" in S. 35 of the Registration Act, "executing means and means only "actually signing". Lordships cannot accept this. A document is executed, when those who take benefits and obligations under it have put or have caused to be put their names to it. Personal signature is not required, and another person duly authorized, may, by writing the name of the party executing, bring about his valid execution, and put him under the obligaabout his valid execution, and partitions involved. Hence the words "person executing" in the Act cannot be read merely as "person signing." mean something more, namely the person, who by a valid execution enters into obligation under the instrument. When the appearance referred to is for the purpose of admitting execution already accomplished, there is nothing to prevent the executing person appearing either in person or by any authorized and competent attorney in order to make a valid admission. There is nothing in the scheme of the Act repugnant to this construction. (Viscount Summer.) PURAN CHAND NAHATTA P. MONMOTHO NATH MUKERJEE.

-Refund to register under-Propriety - Presentation for registration by person acting under power of attorney-Executant net attending to admit execution

A mortgage deed was presented for registration before the Sub-Registrar by a person, acting under a power of attorney, and was received by him. The mortgagor did not attend to admit execution, and the sub-Registrar refused registration making an endorsement on the deed in " Under S. 35, Act XVI of 1908, the following terms: registration refused."

Held, that the reason why registration was refused had nothing to do with defect in presentation (378).

S. 35 relates solely to the admission of execution of the deed, and as the mortgagor did not appear, the Sub-Registrar was bound to take the course he did, leaving the interested parties to appeal to the Registrar under S. 73 (378). tion arising as to the validity of its registration, the High Court held, relying mainly on S. 35 of the Registration Act of 1871, that the execution of the deed not having been admitted by the mother, and her authority for its execution having been denied, the deed was improperly registered, and could not be received in evidence even as against the sons.

Held that, on the true construction of S. 35, the registration of the deed was, as regards the sons who admitted execution of the same, valid and the deed was receivable in evidence as against them (173.)

The words of S. 35 (If all or any of the persons by whom the document purports.....the registering officer shall refuse to register the document), taken literally, undoubtedly seem to require the registering officer to refuse to register a deed which purports to be executed by several persons if any one of those persons deny the execution. Such a construction, however, would cause great difficulty and injustice, and would be inconsistent with the language and tenor of the rest of the Act. The words should therefore be read distributively, and be construed to mean that the registering officer shall refuse to register the document. Quot the persons who deny the execution of the deed, and Quoud any person who appears to be a minor, an idiot, or a lenatic. There appears to be no reason for extending the clause further than this, so as to destroy the operation of the deed as regards those who admit the execution, and who are under no disability, which would be the practical effect of a refusal to register at all (172-3). The proviso in S. 23 of the Act of 1871 shews that the Legislature contemplated a partial registration of a deed, that is, partial as to the persons executing it (173). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) Clause 22 adds the proviso that an instrument affecting land shall "for that purpose" be executed and attested as required by clause 2.

By an agreement in writing, dated 21-12-1915 the respondent and the appellant agreed to prospect for plumbago at the Pattagoda mines under the name of the Pattagoda Mining Company. The agreement provided, inter alia, that the respondent "would thereby give over" his interest in the lease which he had taken from the owners of the mine (which had still 8 years to run) to the Company. The agreement was signed by both parties, but the signatures were not attested by a notary or witnesses. The mine was duly worked under the management of the appellant from the date of the agreement until January 1918, when the working was stopped by mutual agreement. In a suit brought by the appellant on 25-1-1923 for a dissolution of the partnership and payment by the respondent of the amount found due to him upon the taking of accounts, held that the agreement was valid for the purpose of establishing a partnership between the parties, but not for the purpose of affecting the ownership of the mine.

The agreement of December 1915, although ineffective, by reason of the provisions of cl. 2 of the Ordinance, to pass any interest in the land, may yet be referred to as showing the other terms of the partnership. The agreement complies with the requirement of clause 21 of the Ordinance. The provision in clause 22 that an instrument affecting land shall " for that purpose " be executed and attested as required by clause 2 leads to the inference that the instrument, although not notarially executed and attested, may yet be referred to for the purpose of establishing the other terms of the contract. The partnership has now run its course, without the necessity for calling for a transfer of the lease, and all that is claimed is an account of the partnership transactions and payment of what may be found ARSECULERATNE D. due. —8. 60—Certificate of registration—Effect—Deed with registrar's indersement of due registration—Admissibility in evidence—Propriety of registration of such deed— Inquiry into—Permissibility.

The certificate of registration under S. 60 of the Registration Act of 1871 (corresponding to S. 60 of Act of 1908) is that which gives the document the character of a registered instrument, and the Act expressly says that such certificate shall be sufficient to allow of its admissibility in evidence without inquiry as to whether the certificate was properly granted (175-6).

The High Court say, "Unless a deed be registered in accordance with the substantial provisions of the law, it must be regarded as unregistered, though it may, in fact, have been improperly admitted to registration." This is too broadly stated, if the High Court is to be understood to mean that in all cases where a registered deed is produced, it is open to the party objecting to the deed, to contend that there was an improper registration,-that the terms of the Registration Act in some substantial respects have not been complied with. Undoubtedly, it would be a most inconvenient rule if it were to be laid down generally, that all Courts, upon the production of a deed which has the registrar's indorsement of due registration, should be called on to inquire, before receiving it in evidence, whether the registrar had properly performed his duty. This rule ought not to be thus broadly laid down (174-5). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) MOHAMMED EWAZ v. BIRJ LALL.

Registration by-Irregular or Illegal.

Under a wakfnama, or deed of charitable trust, the Aligarh college was one of the objects entitled to the benefit of the trust. The wakfnama was registered by a sub-registrar who was a trustee of the Aligarh College. It was contended that the registration of the deed was invalid because, by virtue of Rule 174 of the rules made under S. 69 of the Registration Act of 1877, the sub-registrar was incompetent to register the wakfnama, being in the words of the rule "personally or otherwise connected with or interested" in the document. There was no allegation made against the good faith of the sub-registrar; on the other hand, it was admitted that he acted faithfully and honestly in the discharge of his duties.

Held, that the disability created by Rule 174 was no more than a question of procedure and that the registration of the deed was valid (229-30).

The registration by the sub-registrar is obviously the essence of the proceedings in effecting registration. If the sub-registrar were disqualified the registrar would be entitled to act, and the fact that the sub-registrar, overlooking his own interest, or regarding it as an interest which created no disqualification, in perfect good faith effected the registration himself is, in their Lordships' opinion, intended by the rules to be a step in the procedure, for it is under the actual heading "Procedure" that the rule is found (230). Ss. 72, 76, 77-Refusal to register-What amounts to-Decree of Court directing registration-Necessity.

On a competent Court pronouncing that the registration of a deed of sale was invalid on the ground that it had been made without the appearance of the vendors, the venders again applied to the registering officer to have their deed registered, but their application was refused by the registrat.

His grounds for refusal were thus stated :- " This deed has been declared to have been illegally registered. Application is now made for registration, but is refused as being presented beyond the proper period." The refusal to register was not indorsed on the deed.

On appeal to the Registrar-General he refused to order the deed to be registered, upon the ground that it must be deemed to have been duly registered on the former occasion.

Held, that the orders of the Registrar-General and of the registrar did not respectively impose upon the vendees the necessity of petitioning the District Court under S. 84 of Act XX of 1866, to order the registration of the deed, or preclude the registering officer from voluntarily registering it, after the appearance of the vendors and their admission of its execution (218).

Those orders made while there was a de facto registration in existence, do not appear to amount to a refusal to register or to order registration within the meaning of the 82nd section. The latter of those orders assumes that there was a registration (218). (Sir Barnes Peacock.) SAH MUKHUN LALL PANDAY v. SAH KOONDUN LALL.

8. 75-Refusal of Sub-registrar to register under 8.35—District Registrar's order on appeal directing registration-Presentation pursuant to.

-Formalities of original presentation-Necessity Registration without them-Validity.

A mortgage deed was presented for registration before the Sub-Registrar by an agent of the mortgagee, acting under a power of attorney. The mortgagor did not attend to admit execution, and the Sub-Registrar accordingly refused registration under S. 35 of the Act. On appeal, the District Registrar ordered registration. Following upon his order the respondent, the Manager of the Court of Wards acting on behalf of the infant children of the mortgagee, who had died in the interval, forwarded the mortgage and the copy of the order of the District Registrar by post to the Sub-Registrar and asked for registration. The Sub-Registrar accepted the document and registered it.

It was contended that such registration was bad because the presentation to the Sub-Registrar after the District Registrar's order ought to have been made with the same formalities as those necessary for the original presentation, and Sub-S. (2) of S. 75 of the Act was relied upon in

was valid (381).

Upon the hypothesis that S. 75, Sub-S. (2), may be dealing with a case, such as the present, in which original presentation has been properly made, and in these circumstanots, and as every condition has been satisfied, there would be nothing to prevent the District Registrar, when he had determined the question of execution, from directing th-t the registration should then be made. The last words in Sub-S. (3) of S. 75, which provide that the registration shall date back, do not necessarily refer only to a registration effected pursuant to the provisions of Sub-S. (2), but to every registration consequent on the order made by the Registrar. There are many mischiefs against which the Mainte was designed to afford protection in requiring obedience to the provisions for presentation in the first instance, but when once the execution of the document has cen proved, and the original conditions for presentation compiled with, there is no reason why they should all be repeated (381-2). There is nothing in the section to prevent the Registrar or the Sub-Registrar from registering a document which had been duly presented, and the execution of which has been proved, without requiring a repetition of all the original steps, but he cannot be compelled to register unless the document be " duly presented " a second time (381-2). Court having no jurisdiction-Decree of-Registration pursuant to-Validity-Registrar entitled to register of his own accord.

If the registering officer was influenced by the order of the High Court to do that which he might have done without it, the fact that the High Court acted without jurisdiction did not invalidate the registration (218).

In this case the High Court directed the registration of a deed, though it had no jurisdiction to do so. Held, that the registration of the deed was, if otherwise valid, not rendered invalid because the registrar was influenced to register the deed by the erroneous order of the High Court. The plaintiffs were purchasers of certain property under a deed of sale executed in their favour by the owner of the property. The deed was registered under the Registration Act XX of 1866. The defendant-appellant, whose attachment of the property in execution of a decree obtained by him against the vendor was raised on objection put in by the plaintiffs on the strength of their sale deed, instituted a suit against the plaintiffs-respondents to set aside the deed of sale on the ground that it had been illegally registered. The Sub-Judge held that the deed was not properly registered and must be considered as an unregistered document and was not admissible in evidence, and that consequently it could not take effect in opposition to the rights of the defendant, the attaching decree-holder. The High Court of the North-Western Provinces on appeal affirmed his deci-sion on practically the same grounds. The plaintiffs thereupon again applied to the registering officer to have their deed registered. But its registration was refused by the final registration authority upon the ground that it must be deemed to have been duly registered when it was first registered. Thereupon the plaintiffs petitioned the High Court, who held that the plaintiffs were entitled to have the deed registered, and directed its registration in the proper manner after the usual inquiries.

of 1860 (217).

That section authorises a petition to the "District Court", which is defined to mean the "Principal Court of original jurisdiction in a district, and includes the High Court in its ordinary civil jurisdiction." Considering that the registration of all conveyances of immoveable property of the value of Rs. 100 or upwards is by Act XX of 1866 rendered compulsory, and that proper legal advice is not generally accessible to persons taking conveyances of land of small value, it is scarcely reasonable to suppose that it was the intention of the Legislature that every registration of a deed should be null and void by reason of a non-compliance with the provisions of S. 19, 21, or 36, or other similar provisions of the Act. It is rather to be inferred that the Legislature intended that such errors or defects should be classed under the general words "defect in procedure " in S. 88 of the Act, so that innocent and ignorant persons should not be deprived of their property through any error or inadvertance of a public officer, on whom they would naturally place reliance. If the registering officer refuses to register, the mistake may be rectified upon appeal under S. 83, or upon petition under S. 84, as the case may be; but if he registers where he ought not to register, innocent persons may be misled, and may not discover, until it is too late to rectify it, the error by which, if the registration is in consequence of it to be treated as a nullity, they may be deprived of their just rights (216). # REGISTRATION OF SHIPS ACT (X OF 1841).

-Registry as British ship under-Condition.

The appeal arose out of an action on the case brought by the appellant (the owner, to the extent of eight sixtyfourth parts, of a vessel, called the "General Wood,") against the respondent, the registering officer of ships, at the port of Bombay, appointed under the Act of the Legislative Council, No. X of 1841, for refusal to register the ship, at that port. To the declaration, the respondent pleaded, that the ship was not, on 11.9-1844 (the day named in the declaration, when the refusal was made), or before, had not been, or was then, entitled to the privileges of, or to be registered as, a British ship.

The ship was built in a foreign port in India, in 1817, within the limits of the Company's charter, by foreigners. It sailed under foreign flags, until 1838, when it was then and thereafter owned by and belonged to British subjects,

Held that the ship was entitled, under the Proclamation of the Governor-General in Council, and the Act of the Legislative Council of India No. X of 1841 (passed in pursuance of the powers granted by the statute, 3 &4 Vict., c. 56) to be registered at Bombay, as a British ship, for the purposes of trade, within the limits of the company's charter.

-Heaving condence-Admissibility.

The widow of a last male owner died in 1892. The plaintiffs then claimed certain lands as his collateral heirs, alleging that the last male owner was descended in the same degree from a common ancestor, as the persons whose descendants in the direct line the plaintiffs themselves were. These persons had made a similar claim through the common antestor in 1847, when the settlement of the estate with the widow was being made, alleging themselves to be her husband's reversionary heirs (the widow then being in the possession of the land in dispute). The principal evidence consisted of the testimony of two of the plaintiffs. One of them stated the descent of his father and mother from the common ancestor in practically the same way as was stated in 1847, and he said he had learnt the particulars of his family from his elders. The other plaintiff said that he had obtained information about his family pedigree from his grandfather. He also spoke of the names of ancestors being called out on the occasion of marriages, and said that in performing the ceremonies of sradh and tar pan the names of his father, grandfather, and of all the ancestors he could remember were repeated.

It was contended that all statements made to the two plaintiffs (witnesses) since the year 1847 were inadmissible under S. 32, Sub-S. 5. of the Evidence Act, as being made post litem. It did not, however, appear that the heirship of the then claimants was really in dispute at the time.

The question was whether the plaintiff in the suit was related to B, the former owner of the suit property, as his daughter's son. B was twice married. His second wife admittedly died without issue. The plaintiff's allegation was that by his first wife B had a daughter, who was the mother of the plaintiff.

Five years before her death, the second wife of B executed a will, declaring in two different parts thereof that she had no issue nor any near relative. The will then stated. "Hardee Sahai, alias Mathu Mal" (the plaintiff) "is related Then after mentioning a to me as my daughter's son." further relative, the will stated: "These are my relatives on my husband's side." Trustees in det-Meaning of

In 1810 in the Bengal Presidency and in 1817 in the Madras Presidency, the British Government had assumed control of all the public endowments and benefactions, Hindu and Mahomedan, and placed them under the charge of the respective Boards of Revenue. In 1863, the Government considered it expedient to divest itself of the charge and control of these institutions, and to place them under the management of their own respective creeds. With this object, Act XX of 1863 was enacted; a system of committee was devised to which were transferred the powers vested in Government for the appointment of managers, trustees and superintendents; rules were tracted to ensure proper management and to empower the seperior court in the district to take cognisance of allegations of misfeasance against the managing authority. The Act contains no definition of the word "trustee"; it uses indifferently and indiscriminately the terms "manager trustee or superintendant," clearly showing that the expressions were used to connote one and the same idea of management. After the enactment of 1863, the Committees to whom the Courf or persona designata.

S. 10 of the Religious Endowments Act XX of 1863 places the right of appointing a member of the committee in the civil court, not as a matter of ordinary civil jurisdiction, but because the officer who constitutes the civil court is sare to be one of weight and authority, and with the best means of knowing the movements of local opinion and feeling and one can bardly imagine a case in which it would be more desirable that the discretion should be exercised by a person acquainted with the district and with all the surroundings (165.) There is an inherent incompetency in the High Court to entertain an appeal from an order of the District Judge under S. 10 of the Religious Endowments Act appointing a person to fill up a vacancy in the committee of a pagoda, and no amount of consent can in such a case confer jurisdiction spon the High Court (167).

Held, therefore, that, notwithstanding that no objection, was taken by the appellant in the High Court itself to its jurisdiction to entertain the appeal, he could take the objection before the P. C. in his appeal from the decision of the High Court (166 7.) (Sir Richard Baggalay.) MEENAK-

 Agreement between two temples regulating respective rights of-Right conferred by law-Effect of agreement

Disputes between the " Y " temple and the " U " temple as to the rights of each to carry on processions were settled by an agreement which provided, inter alia, that the 'U" temple should be at liberty to take the procession of Vedanta Desikar, the only God that had been then installed in the said temple, for 23 specified days in meaning, and must be construed according to its content the year, that the 'Y" temple should be at liberty to conduct certain specified festivals, and all the feftivals of all other idels that might be instituted thereafter, and that, if on any of the 23 days on which festivals were to be conducted for the "U" temple, any of the festivals of the "Y" temple in which processions had to be taken should intervene, the "Y" temple should have the preferential right to carry on its prosessions.

The "U" temple held a procession of Vedanta Desikar on a day which was not one of the 23 days specified in the agreement, and on which a very important festival of the "Y" temple fell to be peeformed. The "Y" temple, accordingly, instituted a suit against the "U" temple, in effect claiming that the "Y" temple was by the agreement aforesaid entitled to prevent the "U" temple from holding any processions except those of Vedanta Desikar, and those only on the 23 days in each year referred to in the agreement, and that the "Y" temple was entitled to prevent the "U" temple from installing or retaining in it any other idol.

Held that while, on the one hand, the agreement imported that the "U" temple would not by any procession or ceremony of its own, or in any other way, interfere with or obstruct any processions or ceremonies of the "Y" temple thereby authorised, except to the extent in terms permitted by the agreement itself, it, on the other hand, in no way parported to interfere with the exercise by the "U" temple of any rights in respect either of processions, ceremonies, or anything else of which by law that temple was irrespective of any consent or approval of the "Y" temple possessed, that by its procession in question the "U" temple infringed no right of the "Y" temple, and that the "Y" temple was, accordingly, not entitled to any relief. As regards the question of res judicata the final judgment of the High Court does not deal in any way with the question whether the defendant's tenure was a jagir nor does the judgment of the Deputy Commissioner at the trial. On appeal the Judicial Commissioner no doubt referred at the beginning of his judgment to the suit land as the defendant's jagir, but he also stated that the only point at issue was as to the rate of rent, and the High Court dealt with the case in the same way. Their Lordships should much regret if there were no Court and no law whereby a remedy could be administered to the evils which must be incidental to married life amongst parties professing the Parsee religion. We conceive that there must be some laws, or some customs having the effect of laws, which apply to the married state of persons of this description. The Supreme Court on the civil side might administer to aggrieved parties remedies customarily afford ed by their own usages, or at least remedies as nearly approaching to them as circumstances would allow. In suits commenced on the Civil side, the peculiar difficulties which belong to the exercise of Ecclesiastical jurisdiction in some matrimonial causes would not arise. The case in 2 Borr. Bon. Sud. Dew. Rep. 209 shows that the Sudder Advalut at Bombay will take cognizance of matrimonial suits between Parsees, and will afford them such relief as a due regard to their own laws and customs will allow (390-1). -Parsees-Wife's suit against husband for-Supreme Court of Bombay on its Ecclesiastical side-Jurisdiction of. to entertain.

The appeal arose out of a suit for restitution of conjugal rights brought on the Ecclesiastical side of Supreme Court of Bombay.

The parties were Parsees, natives of the Island of Bombay, and there resident. Their religion was that of Zoroaster. The wife brought the suit. The husband had gone through the form of marriage with another woman, with whom he was co-habiting. He, therefore, either had another wife, lawful by Parsee law, or he was living in adultery. The question was whether, with reference to the limitation in the charter (granting Ecclesiastical jurisdiction to the Supreme Court), "as far as the circumstances and occasion of the said people shall admit or require," it was consistent with that limit tion for the Ecclesiastical Side of the Sunreme Court to entertain a suit for the re-triction of conjugal rights at the instance of a Parsee wife against her husband.

Held that a suit for the restitution of conjugal rights stri tly an E clesiastical proceeding, could not, consistently with the principles and rules of Ecclesiastical law, be applied to parties who professed the Parsee religion (390). A Court Christian cannot enforce a renewal of co-habitation with an adulterer or adulteress; such a proceeding would be utterly repugnant to its character, its practice, and its p-inciples. -Zemindar-Mocurrary istimrari pettak by-Temant under, dying without heirs-Kesumption on-Zemindar's right of-Receipt of rent by him from members of tenant's family-Effect.

A Hindu Zemindar, having an illegitimate family by a Mahomedan lady domiciled in his house, executed a mokurraree pottah of a mouzah belonging to his Zemindary in the name of S, one of the infant daughters of that family. The grant was clearly intended to create an absolute and hereditary mokurraree tenure.

S died before her father, and not very long after the creation of the tenure. After her death, the father during his life, and afterwards his widows, who, by the Hinda law, were his heirs, continued to receive the rent reserved from those in possession of the lands, the receipts for such rent being, with one exception, taken in the name of S, the original grantee, and in that exceptional case in the name of

On a question being raised as to the effect to be given to that reception of rent as a recognition of the tenure and as an answer to the suit claim to resume the lands included in it, Semble the recognition of the interest of the members of the illegitimate family by the receipt of rent from them would constitute some kind of tenancy requiring to be determined by notice or otherwise, but that circumstance was not of itself sufficient to defeat the suit claim (98).

From this receipt of rent after the death of S, which must have been well known in the family, an inference may undoubtedly be drawn that the Zemindar either originally intended to make the grant for the benefit generally of his illegitimate family, or after the death of his daughter was willing that it should have that effect; and it is difficult to suppose that the widows were not for sometime willing to act on some such view of the transaction. It was impossible, therefore, to treat the parties in possession as mere tres-passers (98). (Sir James W Colvile.) RANGE SONET KOWAR D. MIRZA HIMMUT BAHADUR.

RESUMPTION-(Contd.)

The suit was by the plaintiff (respondent) for the recovery from the defendant (appellant) of possession of four villages, which had been granted by the plaintiff to the defendant by way of maintenance. The plaintiff was the talookdar of the talook containing a number of villages, including the suit four villages. The plaintiff's case was that the lease or gift of the suit villages to the defendant was resumable either at the pleasure of the lessor or upon notice. The defendant, on the other hand, contended that the lease or gift was one for life.

Held that, as the plaintiff was only seeking to resume that which was a portion of her talook, she had a prima facie right to do that, and that it was incumbent upon the defendant who was resisting the resumption to shew a good title against the talookdar (135). By the Charter of Justice establishing the Supreme Court of Bombay that Court was prohibited from entertaining any jurisdiction in any matter concerning the revenue, under the management of the Governor and Council, or any act done in the collection thereof.

N was the owner of a house and piece of ground in the town of Bombay till 1836, when he sold it to H. No change, however, of name was made in the books of the Collectorate, and N's name continued to appear in those books as the registered proprietor of the property. For arrears of quitrent due for the period of N's ownership, a warrant of distraint was issued by the Collector of Revenue at Bombay. The warrant, which authorised the entering into and taking possession of the house in question, was, however, addressed to N. In pursuance of the warrant the house of II was distrained. In an action of trespass, brought by H against the Collector and one of his assistants, held reversing the Supreme Court, that it had no jurisdiction to entertain the ants in this matter concerning the public revenue were right in the demand made, and to decide in their favour only if they acted in entire confirmity to the Regulations of the Governmor and Council of Bombay, for they would be equally entitled to succeed, if the statutes and charters contained no exception or proviso for their protection. There can be no rule more firmly established than that if parties hone fide and not absurdly believe that they are acting in pursuance of statutes and according to law, they are entitled to the special protection which the Legislature intended for them, although they have done an illegal act. If Indian revenue-officers have fallen into a mistake, or without bad faith have been guilty of an excess in executing the duties of their office, the object of the Legislature has been, that they should not be liable to be sued in a civil action before the Supreme Courts-(379.80). -Mortgaged property-Revenue due on-Mortgagee paying-Rights and remedies cf. So: MORTGAGE-MORTGAGED PROPERTY-REVENUE DUE ON.

-Nature of Quit-rent-Land-tax-Reconne sale-Purchaser's rights under.

The Government revenue represents that portion of the produce of the land which from time immemorial has been considered in eastern countries to belong as of right to the sovereign power in the State. In India payment in kind has long since been commuted for a money payment, which, in some cases, is fixed permanently and, in others, is liable to revision by periodical settlements. Sometimes the Government revenue is spoken of as a quit-rent, sometimes as a land-tax. But, however it may be described. and, however it may have been assessed, it is the first and parameunt charge upon the land, and if default is made in payment the estate is sold in a summary way. The Government gives a clear title to the purchaser, and the land is lost for ever to the defaulting proprietor. (Lord Marnaghten.) DAKSHINA MOHUN ROY CHOWDHRY v. SARODA MOHUN ROY CHOWDHRY. -Payment of-Default in-Effect on ownership of estate-Execution sale of estate subsequent to default and before revenue sale-Purchaser's rights.

It was argued that once there was a default in the payment of the Government revenue due in respect of an estate, the estate would in the ordinary course be sold, and all that an execution purchaser of the estate subsequent to the date of the default purchases is not the estate but the right to receive any surplus sale-proceeds of the estate when it should be sold for revenue. But liability to sale is not the same thing as sale, and until a revenue sale takes place the ownership of the estate remains as it has been, except so far as the provisions of the Act (Bengal Act XI of 1859) interfere with it. It is always open to the Collector under S. 18 to exempt the estate from sale if the arrears are paid up before sale; and it is a matter of common knowledge that this is a power which Collectors exercise To regard an estate in respect of which default has freely. occurred, and which is therefore liable to be sold, as a lost e-tate would be quite contrary to the facts as they exist. -Settlement for-Object and effect of -Title-Possessien-Right to-Effect on-Trust to sohich property subject -Effect on.

The principal claim of S to hold the resumed lands free from this trust on the grounds advanced by her, is destitute entirely of legal foundation. She rested her title on the effect of the resumption proceedings and the settlement for revenue with her. Such a settlement does not establish proprietary right in the land, but is made with Government as to their claim to their khiraj, or revenue. The settlement and the possession under it being evidence of a right to possession, are also so far evidence of proprietary right, but do not necessarily constitute it. A fortiori, they could not divest and destory trusts to which the settlor was subject. The claim supposes a mere settlement for revenue to have the same effect in clearing away preceding titles which a sale under the Revenue Laws works; but antecedent trusts have, in certain cases, been impressed by the decisions of Courts of Justice, including this Tribunal on estates, acquired even under these revenue sales. S could not get rid of her shebait title and possession by the machinery of this settlement, though it was in terms made with her as a private person (305). (Sir Robert Phillimore.) JUGGUT DOSSEE P. In a suit to annul the sale of a talook for arrears of revenue, the courts below, by their decrees, annulled the sale and directed all the costs (of the proprietor and of the Government) to be paid by the purchaser. The Privy Council, while affirming the decrees below, as regards the annulment of the sale, reversed so much of the decrees below as condemned the purchaser in costs, and directed that each party should bear his own costs both in the coarts below and in the appeal to the Privy Council. They did so because, in their Lordships' view, the purchaser stood wholly free from blame; because he purchased the talook at a public auction, which to all appearances was regularly beld under the sanction of the proper authorities, he paid the purchase-money into the treasury, and, after a me delay, got possession of the estate; and the entire purchase-money was appropriated by the proprietor (98 9).

The appeal was against a decree pronounced by the Sudder Special Commission, appointed under Regulation I of 1821 for the ceded and conquered provinces under the Presidency of Bengal. By that decree, so much of the decree of the Mofessil Special Commission, constituted under the provisions of the same Regulation, as annulled a sale in 1802 of lands in Allahabad for arrears of Government revenue, and decreed the restitution thereof to the respontlent, was affirmed; but so much of that decree as directed compensation out of the Government treasury in favour of the appellant, was reversed. The suit to annul the sale was brought only in the year 1821.

The Judicial Committee affirmed the decrees below, except as to compensation and restitution money and costs. The sale having taken place by the direction of the Government, and there being no fraud on the part of the purchaser the Judicial Committee, under cl. 2 of S. 4 of Regulation I of 1821, awarded the purchaser compensation to be paid by the Government.

The length of time that elapsed between the sale, of which complaint is made, and the commencement of these proceedings, though very properly urged as matter of grave consideration with reference to the judicial discretion to be exercised, and the mode of exercising it, has, with propriety, been admitted not to form an objection to the jurisdiction, or a bar to relief in such a case as the present (111). On a claim by the purchaser for the refund of the purchase-money so appropriated by the proprietor, the courts below, without entering into any investigation of the profits made by the purchaser during his occupation of the estate, assumed that he had reimbursed himself the amount of the purchase-money and interest out of the profits of the estate. the courts below therefore thought it unaccessary to give any or ler to return the sale price. There was, however, no ground upon which the courts below could found such an assumption. According to the proprietor's account, the talook for some years before the safe had not enabled her to pay the revenue, and there were no facts stated to show that it had been more productive in the hands of the purchaser.

Held, therefore morlifying the decrees below in that respect, that an account should be taken of the principal and interest due to the purchaser in respect of the purchasemoney paid by him into the treasury, and also of the net profits made by him out of the estate during his occupation, and that upon payment to him, by the proprietor of whatever (if anything) might appear to be due to him on taking such account, possession of the talook should be delivered to the proprietor (989). 1,10,000 sieca rupees.

The sale was held on the 22nd of June, 1815, and, at that time, the law stood thus:-The discretionary power of deciding whether the whole of a defaulter's lands. or any or what portion of them, should be actually sold to pay the arrears of revenue, which was originally vested in the Governor-General in Council, was transferred to the Board of Revenue and Commissioners. subject nevertheless to the control of the Governor-General in Council, whenever he thought fit to interpose in his executive capacity. But in order to assist the Board in this decision, and to prevent delay, it was the duty of the Collector, whenever any revenue fell in arrear, to report the amount of it to the Board of Revenue, or Board of Commissioners, and, either before or after advertising a sale. to send a statement of the particular land of the defaulter which he proposed should be sold to pay off the arrears, but the Collector was in no case to proceed to an actual sale without the express sanction of the Board.

Held, on the construction of the Regulations in force at the time, that the sale by a Collector of a whole talook in one lot for arrears of revenue, which might have been paid off by the proceeds of some definite portion of the talook. without specific authority previously conferred by the Board of Revenue was an act unauthorised by the general rules

The sales on which the respondents' power to enhance depends took place under Bengal Regulation XI of 1822; and the rights of the purchasers through whom the respondents' claim were defined by the 30th and three following sections of that Regulation. Those enactments were repealed by the 1st section of Act No XII of 1841; and all the provisions of that Act, with the exception of the 1st and 2nd sections, were again repealed by Act No. 1 of 1845. which, as modified by some subsequent Acts, is the existing sale law. Neither of the two last-mentioned Acts contains any saving of rights acquired under the Acts which it repealed; and though each gave to purchasers at sales for arrears of Government revenue powers equal to or even larger than those given by the repealed Acts, it expressly limited those powers to purchasers at future sales, i.e. "sales under this Act." The respondents, therefore, cannot invoke Regulation XI of 1822, as the foundation of their alleged rights, because that has been absolutely repealed; and they cannot call in aid the subsequent Acts, because they have given no power to purchasers at sales which took place before they were passed (269-70). (Sir James W Colvile.)

Sales for arrears of revenue are of constant occurrence; anything which impairs the security of purchasers at those sales tends to lower the price of the estates put up for sale. It is therefore of the utmost importance in the interest of the revenue paying population of India that all questions that can arise as to the validity of a sale for arrears of revenue should be determined speedily (175). The appeal arose out of a suit brought for the purpose of annolling the sale by the Collector in one lot of a whole tale-sk for arrears of revenue, which might have been paid off by the proceeds of some definite portion of the talook. According to the Regulations in force at the time the collector had no authority to hold such a sale except by a specific authority previously conferred by the Board of Revenue. No such authority had been conferred by the Board, and the question was what effect ought to be given to the subsequent confirmation of the sale by the Board.

Held that the sale which was illegal and void when it was held was not rendered valid by the unauthorized confirmation of it by the Board of Revenue subsequently (97).

In considering the effect of the subsequent confirmation of the sale by the Board, it must be remembered that the Board had not the supreme but only a delegated authority, and that by the terms in which that authority was conferred they were expressly required to exercise their discretion before the sale took place, and that there is no power conferred on them to adopt and confirm an unauthorised sale by the collector (97). ### Natural stream—Artificial watercourse— Water flowing through.

-Right to use of -Basis and extent of -Distinction

The right to the water of a river flowing in a natural channel through a man's land, and the right to water flowing to it through an artificial watercourse constructed on his neighbour's land, do not rest on the same principle. In the former case each successive riparian proprietor is, prima facie, entitled to the unimpeded flow of the water in its natural course, and to its reasonable enjoyment as it passes through his land, as a natural incident to his ownership of it. In the latter, any right to the flow of the water must rest on some grant or arrangement, either proved or presumed, from or with the owners of the lands from which the water is artificially brought, or on some other legal origin (38). #### Upper and lower owners-Stream flowing through estates.

-Irrigation rights in.

In the absence of a right acquired by contract with the lower heritors, or by prescriptive use, an upper riparian proprietor has no right to dam back a river running through his land and to impound as much of its water as he may find convenient for the purposes of irrigation, leaving only the surplus, if any, for the use of proprietors below. His common law right is to take and use for the purpose of irrigation so much only of the water of the stream as can be abstracted without materially diminishing the quantity which is allowed to descend for the use of riparian proprietors below, and without impairing its quality. What quantity of water can be abstracted and consumed without infringing that essential condition must in all cases be a question of circumstance, depending mainly upon the size of the river or stream and the proportion which the water abstracted bears to its entire volume (68 9).

The legal right of the lower riparian owners is to have the water of the stream transmitted to them continuously and without interruption, and without any substantial diminution in volume, their right being only subject to the qualification that an upper proprietor may, for perposes which the law regards as legitimate, withdraw from the stream as it passes along his lands so much of its stream as will not materially affect its downward flow, or impair their uses of it (72). ### Water-Right to flow of-Obstruction by neighbouring proprietor-Suit in respect of.

- Maintainability-Conditions.

The plaintiff and the defendant were proprietors of land and gardens on opposite sides of a khal in which the tide in the River Hooghly flowed and re-flowed, and by which the surface water of certain lands was carried in a direction from the east to the west in the Hooghly, the plaintiff being the proprietor on the north side, and the defendant on the south side at the mouth of the khal. The khal was a tidal creek daily subject to the flow of the river. For the protection of banks on each side of the khal, walls had been erected, one at each side of the khal. Upon the wall on his side becoming dilapidated, the defendant constructed a fresh one, whereby the direction of the wall was altered. A portion of it was built further in towards the defendant's land than it had been before, and another small portion was buit a little further out, making what might he called in one sense an encroachment.

The plaintiff, alleging that he was entitled to the salum on which the defendant had built his wall, sued for possession thereof by demolishing the wall. The plaint aver-"By the said act of the defendant, injury having accrued to the retaining wall of my garden, and inconvenience having been caused to the passage of boats to my screw-house through the said khal, and apprehensions being created as to the screw-house falling down eventually, cause of action has arisen."

It was not found-indeed the evidence pointed in the other direction—that the defandant, by what he had dose had sensibly altered the flow of water. All that was found was that the defendant encroached on the bed of the khal, which was the soil of the Government, without causing any sensible injury to the plaintiff.

Held, that the High Court, erred in ordering the removal of a portion of the defendant's khal.

The case of Bickett v. Morris (L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. p. 47)

does not govern the present case, because

(1) the present plaintiff does not state his cause of action in the manner in which it was stated in Bickett v. Morris. The plaintiff does not state that, he as a riparian proprietor, was entitled to the flow of the water as it had been prietor, was entitled to the flow of the water as it had been accustomed to flow, and that that flow was seriously and sensibly directed so as to be an injury to his rights, but he puts his case on the ground that he is the owner of the soil on which the wall was built, as issue which is found against him:

(2) the present plaintiff has neither chained nor proved such an easement as that which has been described in the case of Bickett v. Morris, and which was there interfered with; nor was any issue raised as to such a right of easement;

(3) the plaintiff has not all the rights of a riparian proprietor, or he would have been entitled to the bed of the stream ad medium filum.

The Government being in possession of the khal, they may be able to do what they like with it: and plaintiff would have no right to complain as against them of any interference with the flow. He could therefore have no right against a riparian proprietor on the other side;

(4) Lastly, the defendant, by what he has done, has not, to use the words of Lord Blackburn, sensibly altered the flow of water.

Without establishing this, the plaintiff has failed to show any such injury to his right as would support an action. (Sir Robert P. Collier.) KALI KISHEN TAGORE P. JODOO LAL MULLICK. (1879) 6 I. A. 190 (195 6) 5 C. L. R. 97 = 3 Suth. 656 = 4 Sar. 61 = Bald. 286.

The effect of the case of Bickett v. Morris (L.R.1 H. L. Sc. p. 47) may be stated thus: A riparian proprietor on one side of a stream complained of the riparian proprietor on the other side, who had built into the solum of the stream beyond a line which had been agreed upon between the parties, and had thereby obstructed and changed the flow of the water so that the plaintiff's right to have the water flow in its accustomed manner was injured. It was held that such an obstruction was such an injury to the plaintiff's rights as enabled him to support the action without proof of actual damage immediate or even probable. The ratio decidendi is illustrated by the remark of the Lord Chancellor: "It was asked in argument whether a proprietor on the banks of a river might not build a boat house apon it? Undoubtedly this would be a fair use of his rights, provided he did not thereby obstruct the river or divert its course; but if the erection produced this effect. the answer would be that, essential as it might be to the full enjoyment of the use of the river, it could not be permit-(194.)

This case was explained by Lord Elackbern in this manner: "The defender had without any right built an encroachment on his side of the river which necessarily caused more water to flow on the plaintiff's side, and though that encroachment was small, it was such as in a small stream to make a sensible alteration in the flow. That was an injury to the proprietary right of the pursuer, but he was not able to qualify present damage." (1945.) (Sir Robert P. Collier.) KALI KISHEN TAGORE: JODOO LAL MULLICK. (1879) 6 I. #### RIPARIAN PROPRIETORSHIP.

-Issues-Onns of proof.

The appellant was the owner of a targe estate in Zillah Sarun, which comprised the Doomsee estate. The respondents were Zemindars in Tirhoot, which comprised the Sohappore estate. The two Zillahs were divided by the river Gunduck, which at that part of its course had a northem and a southern channel. In 1790-1, when the two estates were permanently settled, the Gunduck ran in the northern channel; which at that time was the boundary of the two Zillahs, and also of the two estates, Tirhoot and, Sohagpore lying on the northern, Sarun and Doomsee on the southern bank of the stream. In 1837, the river, whether by gradual recession or sudden shifting was not very clear, had got into the southern channel; and a quantity of chur land to the north of that channel was then resumed by Government and settled with the Zemindars of Sobagpore. In 1846 it was again settled with the same Zemindars, who remained in possession until 1848, when the river, having returned to its northern channel, the deara land was claimed by proprietors on the southern or Sarun side of the river. consequence was an Act IV of 1840 suit, which was decided in favour of the Zemindars of Sohagpore. In 1856, on the expiry of the last temporary settlement, the question arose with whom the Government should engage for the revenue, and it was finally decided by the Board of Revenue that a settlement should be made with the Zemindars of Doomsee; who accordingly obtained possession. The Board's decision proceeded upon two principles, ara, that an usage existed that the main channel of the Gunduck should be the boundary of the Zemindars, and that, therefore, the interest of the Zemindars of Sohagpore had been of a limited, temporary, and conditional character. Thereupon the Zemindars of Solagpore instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose to impeach that settlement and to recover possession. The High Court found that the land in dispute was identical with that formerly settled with the maliks of Sohagpore who (it was assumed) have a permanent proprietary interest therein.

RIPARIAN PROPRIETORSHIP-(Contd.)

Held, that the proper issues to be tried in the cause were (1) whether the land had been settled in 1837 with the maliks of Schagpore as proprietors of alluvium which had gradually accreted to their estate; or upon what other grounds such settlement was made,-the onus of proving gradual accretion being on plaintiffs: and (2) whether there was at the permanent settlement, and had been since, a clear and definite usage such as supposed by the Board of Revenue,-the burden of proving the affirmative of that being on the defendant. The plaintiffs and defendants were all inhabitants of a village, and the subject of the dispute was a tank belonging to that village. The plaintiffs claimed in their plaint to be hereditary hukdars, that is, rightful owners, of the tank, and they prayed for a declaration that they had the sole right to repair it at their own exclusive cost. It was either admitted or found that the tank was the common property of the village, and that the villagers at large had full right to the enjoyment of it; but the plaintiffs contended that the function of cleaning, repairing, and generally managing and protecting the tank was an hereditary possession of their family, which they had a right to retain so long as they bore the cost of it.

Held, that such a right as that could not be claimed without a corresponding obligation (52).

The plaintiff's counsel are unable to shew in what way any obligation is imposed on their family. There is no endowment to support the tank, and no right of taking tolls or fees. It is confessedly at the option of the plaintiff's family whether they will execute the repairs or not. In their

Diversion for irrigation purposes of water of, by putting up permanent masonry structures.

Claim to Evidence disproving, but disclosing right to diversion by putting up temporary structures. Decree proper in case of Declaration of latter right.

Appellant, the owner of the Gangole estate, sued the owners of two other estates for a declaration of his right to build a permanent masonry structure across a hill stream known as the Kovvada river, which flowed though his estate, for the purpose of diverting its water for feeding the Saglpadu stream which irrigated the lands in his estate.

The courts below found that for more than 20 years before the commencement of the suit the defendants, whose estates lay below the appellants' estate, had enjoyed the water free entirely from any such interruption as permanent masonry structures would create, and the High Court dismissed the suit on foot of that finding. Both the Courts below, however, keld that there had been from time to time an interruption of the water of Kovvada through the erection of temporary structures put up by the owners of the Gangole estate at the point of junction of the Sagipadu and Kovvada streams, and that those structures were used for the purpose of feeding the Sagipadu stream with water from the Koovada river, and that that right had been earnised for 20 years before suit.

Held that, in the circumstances of the case, the decree of the High Court dismissing the suit was wrong, and that there ought to be a declaration that the appellant was entitled to divert water from the Kovvada Stream so as to accure a flow in the Sagipadu channel for the purpose of impation by the erection of temporary structures at the RIVER - (Contd.)

High-water mark in—Land immediately contiguous to.

Onoucrship of.

The case then is, that the East Indian Company, being the owners in fee of a certain portion of land lying between the high and low-water mark which was subject to certain curvatures for navigation and otherwise, with the leave and consent of those who were interested, altered the character of the land. Instead of making the land a portion of the bed of the river, they made it permanent dry land; there is, therefore, a portion of permanent dry land westward of high-water mark, and forming a part of what was anciently the bed of the river, which is now part of the bed of the river, and that portion of land, according to the judgment of the court below, is the part to which the accretion in question has taken place. The questions, therefore, is reduced to this: who is the owner of the land immediately contiguous to the high-water mark in the river at this place? The answer is, those persons who were owners of that portion of the bed of the river which now constitutes dry land, and they are the Respondents, the East India Company (287-8). (Sir William H. RIVER -(Could.)

Land once alluvial lying between two branches of a. or between two rivers-Shifting of volume of water-Intermediate tract of land-Ownership and possession of.

-Right to, of reparian owner on side of channel for time being fordable-Custom of Proof of Onus.

The plaintiffs were the owners of a Zemindary on the north side of the north channel of the Ganges, and the defendants, the owners of zemindary A on the south side of the South Channel of the Gauges, both streams flowing from the west and joining each other to the east of the property in dispute. The tract of land between those two channels was, as early as 1790, in the possession of one N. H., with whom, as occupier and proprietor a settlement was made by the Government in 1790. In 1800 a permanent settlement was made with his son. N H, and his heirs and those who succeeded him in title, including the defendants, who claimed by purchase from a descendant of N. H. held uninterrupte I possession of the land in dispute from 1790 to the date of suit.

In 1849 or 1850 the great volume of water left the northern channel and took the southern channel, whereby the northern channel which before had been deep became fordable, and the southern channel which before had been fordable became deep. The plaintiffs alleged that upon that state of facts they were entitled to obtain possession of the whole of the land lying between those two channels, by virtue, inter alia, of an alleged custom.

Held that, in order to succeed in disturbing a possession of such long duration, under the circumstances of the case. it was necessary for the plaintiff's to establish a custom existing in the district in which those properties were situated to the effect "that where land which had once been alluvial lies between two branches of a river (or it would appear between two rivers), and from time to time the volume of water shifts so that alternately one of those channels is deep and the other is fordable, then the whole of such intermediate land belongs to the land-owner on the side of the channel which at any given time is fordable; in short, that the ownership and right of possession of the whole intermediate tract of land shift with the volume of thewater, always attaching to the riparian proprietor on the side of the channel which happens for the time being to befordable." (36).

The custom appears to be based on the hypothesis that at all times one channel is deep and the other fordable, because it could not apply if both were deep, or both were fordable; the custom is also wholly independent of any question of accretion or errosion of banks; it attaches merely upon the water becoming deeper or shallower in one channel or the other without necessarily any alteration in the beds or banks of the channels (36).

Held further that very clear and distinct evidence of the existence of the custom was necesary, since the operation of such a custom must be to render the rights of property fluctuating and precarious (36).

Churs detached formed in middle of a-Acquisitions of-Proof of-Purchaser bona fide of-Ejectment suit against-Onus on plaintiff in.

Acquisitions of the nature of this chur (a detached chur washed away and reformed in the bed of a navigable river) are often doubtful in their origin; they must depend much on oral testimony, which time is constantly destroying or impairing, and it is often hard to say who is the person to whom the law would ascribe the legal ownership of them. The mere cultivation of them, like that of waste or jungle lands, carries with it no prima facie character of usurpation or wrong. An undisputed possession and cultivation. even though for a few years only, would the more readily induce a purchase, and a purchaser bona bide and without notice might with perfect honesty, and even with the favourable construction by a Court of Justice of his acts, delend his possession by insisting on strict legal proof of an adverse (Lord Chelmsford.) -Land wached away and reformed in bed of-Ownership of.

But this is a case of a claim to land washed away and re-formed in the bed of a navigable river, the ownership of the soil of which is not commonly in the riparian proprietors of its banks, and which is not proved in this case to have belonged to the predecessor in title of either disputant. The re-forming of laud in such a stream, after a considerable interval and frequent floods, is not prima facie to be ascribed to a loss from any particular portion of territory, nor is the land which has been removed by a sudden avul, sion reclaimable unless the circumstances supply evidence of identity, which is wanting in the case before us. This re-formed land is not ascribed to avulsion, and several years elapsed between the loss of the Plaintiff's land and the appearance of this chur. The title by accretion to a new formation generally, is not founded on equity of compensation, but on a gradual accretion by adherence to some particular land which may be termed the nucleus of accretion. The land gained will then follow the title to that parcel to which it adheres. It is obvious, therefore, that such a title is not established by mere proof of general inclusive boundaries of land, at a time long preceding the actual formation of the chur, since the lands that have such a floctuating boundary as a tidal river, and which are them selves subject to loss and gain of quantity by acts independent of the owner's concurrence, and which may pass from side to side of the river boundary, have not the ordinary element of fixedness which belongs to immoveable estate, in the common course of things. A detached chur, independent of usage, in such a stream would belong to neither riparian proprietor: and the circumstance that it was subtended by the land of one would not be enough to entitle him to it. #### RYOTWARI TENURE.

——Conselect District—Thirty years' settlement of 1910—Notation of 1st June. 1910, cl. 36—Reservation in—Meaning and effect—Achikuttu lands—Wet crops raised on—Levy of set rate in case of—Legality—Wet crops raised even prior to settlement of 1910—Effect.

Wet crops having been raised on achekattu lands which were "retained as ordinary dry," and which were registered as dry and assessed accordingly at the thirty years' settlement of 1910, in the Chingleput District, the Government levied an enhanced assessment on those lands, the enhancement representing the difference between wer rates and the dry rates already paid. Wet crops had been raised on the said lands even prior to the settlement of 1910. In a sait by the owners of the lands, inter alia, to recover from the Government the enhanced assessment so levied on the ground that the levy thereof was opposed to the Notification of 1st June, 1910, and was illegal, held, that the levy of the enhanced assessment in question was not opposed to the said Notification and was not illegal, and that it did not give the plaintiffs any cause of action.

So long as lands which were registered as dry were cultivated with dry crops it would obviously be unfair and opposed to the whole scheme of the settlement that their assessments should be enhanced. On the other hand, there would be nothing harsh or unreasonable in providing that, if during the period of the settlement the pattadar should raise valuable wet crops on lands registered as dry, that is, as bearing the much less valuable dry crops, he should be called upon to pay at the higher rates. The reservation as to lands which might be converted from dry to wet or manavari, in cl. 36 of the Notification of 1st June, 1910, was inserted for the purpose of meeting such a case.

Conversion, within the meaning of cl. 36 of the said Notification, means conversion by the pattadar and only reserved to the Government a power to increase the assessment where there had been such a conversion. In considering whether there has been a conversion within the meaning of the re servation in cl. 36, the fact that wet crops may have been raised on the lands prior to the settlement is not the governing consideration. The raising of wet crops on land registered at the settlement as dry is a conversion within the meaning of the reservation. So long as they cultivated the land as dry the pattadars were entitled to hold the lands for the whole period of the settlement at the rate assessed on them as such, but when they proceeded to raise wet crops on them they effected a conversion and justified the revenue authorities in imposing upon them "corresponding wet assessment," that is, the appropriate wet rates. #### RYOTWARI TENURE-(Contd.)

- Land held under - Submergence of - Relinquishment by ryot on - Proof of - Quantum - Re-formation in situ after relinquishment - Government's right in case of.

Mere submergence of land held under ryotwari tenure does not infer a relinquishment by the holder. On the other hand, if he wishes to retain his right to the submerged lands on the offchance of their being reformed in situ at some future date, he must continue to pay year by year the assessment or rent which is due to Government.

Held, on the evidence, affirming the High Court, that, on the submergence of lands held under ryotwari tenure, the ryots holding the same relinquished their holdings (and thereby secured immunity from further assessment in respect of them) as and when the lands became submerged and no longer capable of cultivation, and that when the lands were re-formed in situ, they became once more the absolute property of the Government both under the Madras Act III of 1905, and at common law, exactly as they had been when the ryotwari tenures were first instituted (72-3). A contract for the sale of immoveable property, which was in the form of an indenture and was registered, contained a clause that the vendors should sell and the purchaser should purchase the land, being plots Nos. 2 and 3, etc. with the privy and the passages shown in red colour in the plan thereto annexed and signed by the respective parties thereto together with the buildings standing thereon being the major portion of the hereditaments and premises described in the schedule thereunder written except the plot No. 1. The contract contained other clauses providing for the payment of the purchase-money and for the vendee being put in possession. Upon the plan annexed to the contract the areas of the plots contracted to be sold were struck out but the reference to the area was retained in the schedule to the contract.

In a suit brought for the specific performance of the contract, the question was raised whether the contract was on the basis of area per square yard.

Held. on the evidence, that, though the allegation of plaintiffs (vendors) that the statement of area in the schedule was left thereby an oversight was false, the retention of the area in the schedule was not by way of an assurance and amounted to no more than a misdescription. #### Rights of parties on.

English law principles-Applicability of, to cases under S. 54 of Transfer of Property Act.

In England a contract for sale of real property makes the purchaser the owner in equity of the estate, and from this principle it follows that, where the rights as to payment of interest on the purchase-money are not regulated by the terms of the contract, the purchaser is deemed to be entitled to the rents and profits of the property as from the time when he did take, or could safely have taken, possession; and interest on the purchase-money runs in favour of the vendor from that time.

Semble, this rule of English law is inapplicable to cases governed by S. 54 of the Transfer of Property Act because it is expressly provided by that section that such a contract creates no interest in or charge upon the land. (Lord Buckmaster, L. C.) MAUNG SHWE v. MAUNG INN.

Qualified covenant.

- What amounts to.

A clause in a sale-deed to the effect:—" Should any kind of dispute arise, whether now or hereafter, on my part, or that of my beirs or assigns, in the property sold, I, the vendor, and my heirs will be responsible therefor" is a qualified covenant of title to the property sold (175, 177).

sale.

The plaintiff-appellant and the defendant-respondent, on 3-10-1882, entered into an agreement for the sale of an estate, called Haka Dabha. The agreement was in these words:—"Out of Rs. 10,075 at which it has been settled by Mahant J" (the respondent) "to convey Haka Dabha to Babu B" (the appellant) "Rs. 200 have been received as earnest money. The balance, riz., Rs. 9-875, exclusive of costs, will be received in cash within 15 days, and then I will execute the sale-deed and get it registered. The purchaster will hear the costs on account of the stamp paper and the registration and mutation fees. I will have nothing to do with them. I will take the entire amount in cash. If the balance is not paid within 15 days the earnest money will be forfeited, and the vendor will be at liberty to sell the Haka or not."

The respondent appeared to have thought that under that contract of sale the appellant was entitled to a covenant to the following effect:—" Should any kind of dispute arise, whether now or hereafter, on my part, or that of my heirs or assigns, in the property sold, I, the vendor, and my heirs will be responsible therefor."

Their Lordships were, however, not prepared to hold that such a contract of sale gave the purchaser a right to insist on any formal covenants such as the practice of English lawyers had attached to an English contract of sale if that was what was in the minds of the parties (175). #### SALE-EXECUTION OF DEED OF.

 Payment of purchase-money in part—Possession with vendor-Rights of parties in case of-English equitable doctrines-Inapplicability of to transaction between Hindus or between Hindus and Mahomedans,

The Court below arrived at the conclusion that the real and final contract between the parties was one of absolute sale and purchase, upon which there had been a partial payment of the purchase-money. The Court below further held that, in these circumstances, a complete title to the lands passed to the purchaser by virtue of the Bill of sale on its execution; and (by a supposed application of the doctrines of English Courts of Equity) that the vendor in possession of the lands was to be treated as having only a lien for the unpaid balance of the purchase-money; and was to be held accountable as a mortgagee in possession for the rents and profits.

Quare, whether the principles upon which the Court below proceeded were sound in themselves, or applicable to a transaction of the nature in question between Hindoos or between a Hindoo and a Mussulman (305-6), (Sir James W. -Possession not delivered-Rights in case of-Hindu rendor.

The Court below seems to have ruled that the effect of the execution of a Bill of sale by a Hindoo vendor is, to use the phraseology of English law, to pass an estate irrespectively of actual delivery of possession, giving to the instrument the effect of a conveyance operating by the Statute of Uses, Whether such a conclusion would be warranted in any case is very questionable (306-7). Where there is no other evidence, the only way in which a sale of immoveable property can be proved to be a fraudulent sale is by showing utter inadequacy of consi deration.

When the total value of property was Rs. 20,000, and the sale thereof was for that amount, and it appeared that Rs. 17,000 out of the Rs. 20,000 was an absolutely good consideration and had passed, held, that the fact that the passing of the remaining Rs. 3,000 was not satisfacforily l

The appellant set up title to a moiety of the property seized by the Sheriff under a writ of sequestration, addressed to him, in execution of a decree obtained against one A. The appellant claimed title to the mojety under a deed of sale executed by .f in his favour during the pendency of the suit in which the said decree was passed. And the principal question in the case was whether the sale was a long fide conveyance for a valuable consideration, or whether it was collusive between the parties, and intended to defraud the creditors of A.

The Supreme Court held on the evidence that the deed of sale was fraudulent and void as against the creditors of A. and had been executed for the purpose of defeating a sequestration (49-50). In a suit for the price of goods, which had admittedly never been delivered, it appeared that the plaintiff- had never been in a position to deliver the goods they had sold. and also that the defendants had not agreed to accept what were called delivery orders, directed to third persons, as something equivalent to delivery so as to exonerate the plaintiffs from liability to deliver the goods, and to entitle them to sue for the price. The making of patta pattis in the contracts relating in the suit goods resulted in an agreement that the obligation to deliver the goods should not remain effective, that the price of them should neither be demanded nor paid, but merely the resulting differences.

Held that those differences having been paid or tendered, and nothing being due in regard to them, the plaintiffwere not entitled to recover anything. (Land Darling.) SUKDEVDOSS RAMPRASAD P. GOVINDOSS CHATHUR BHUJADOSS & CO. (1927) 55 I.A. 32 =

SALE-IMMOVEABLE PROPERTY (INCLUDING LAND.)

Contract for sale of.

Completed contract or not-Evidence.

Suit by vendors for specific performance of a contract entered into by defendant's deceased father to purchase a dwelling house from one of the plaintiffs.

The Subordinate Judge dismissed the suit holding that there was no completed contract between the parties for the sale and purchase of the house in question. He found that there was an agreement to sell, that the price had been fixed, that some sort of draft was settled, that the defendant's father even advanced money for the purchase of (1873) 20 W. B. 211. stamp paper, and that the stamp paper itself was purchased and delivered to the defendant's father. But he was of opinion that the most important condition precedent to the completion of the contract was the inspection of title deeds by the defendant's father and that the plaintiffs did not afford him or his agents such an opportunity,

On appeal the High Court came, on the evidence, to the opposite conclusion. They held on the evidence that the plaintiffs' case of the existence of a completed agreement to sell and buy was more credible, reversed the decree below, and gave a decree for specific performance.

Privy Council affirmed the High Court decree. (Lord) Atkinson.) BAIJNATH RAM P. GOPAL RAM KHEMKA.

(1928) 108 I. C. 681 = A. I. R. 1928 P. C. 92. -In a suit for specific performance of an alleged contract for the sale of immoveable property the issue between the parties was whether there was a contract the plaintiff's alleging a contract, the defendants denying a contract and alleging that there was not even negotiation for a contract. There was no dispute as to the subject-matter of the alleged contract. According to the plaintiffs' story they were actually put into possession of the property, which was the subject-matter of the contract; the price was arranged and a portion thereof was paid as earnest money.

Held, reversing the High Court and restoring the Subordinate Judge, that there was sufficient evidence in the case to establish a contract. (Sir Lancelet Sanderson.) BINDA

SALE—INCUMBRANCES ON PROPERTY SOLD. Discharge of.

DATE FIXED FOR COMPLETION OF CONTRACT-DISCHARGE BEFORE-VENDOR'S UNDERTAKING AS TO-

-Compliance with-Procuring of mortgage's consent to discharge before that date if.

A contract for the sale of land, by which time was made in all respects strictly of the essence of the contract, fixed a date for the completion of the purchase and empowered the vendor, in the event of default on the part of the purchaser, to put an end to the contract. The contract also provided that if the purchaser raised any valid objection within the time allowed for that purpose to the title, the vendor was to remove it within a reasonable time. The purchaser made default in closing the transaction on the date fixed, and the vendor rescinded the contract. In a suit for specific performance brought by the vendee, he contended that the vendor had no right to rescind, as the latter was not, on the date fixed for the completion of the contract, ready-that is, able and willing to convey to the purchaser the fee of the property sold, inasmuch as he had not before that day paid off and discharged a mortgage existing on the property and procured the legal estate in the property to be revested in

The evidence showed that the vendor had, before the date fixed for the completion of the contract, offered to have the mortgage discharged on closing, and that the mortgagee would have had she been called upon to do so on or before the date fixed for the closing of the transaction, executed a discharge, and that she had consented to do so upon payment. It also appeared that the procedure applicable to the discharge of the mortgage in question and the revesting in the vendor of his former estate in the property mortgaged was very simple. The purchaser contended that, despite all this evidence, the vendor must be held in point of law to have been unable to complete the contract on the date fixed, because the vendor was not entitled to compel the mortgagee to execute a discharge and the mortgagee might have changed her mind on or before the date fixed for the completion of the contract.

Held that, in the absence of evidence that the mortgagee contemplated the change suggested, it could not be held that the vendor was disabled from conveying the interest sold, owing to the bare possibility that a contingent and improbable event might conceivably occur (127-8).

There is no authority for the view that a consent to a certain thing, which, if unrevoked, would validate a vendor's title, is ineffectual for that purpose if, although unrevoked in fact, it is revocable in character. the vendor nor one B to whom he had sold other property of his with a stipulation that he (B) should discharge the said incumbrances having discharged the same, the mortgagees who held the prior charges upon the property sold to the appellants took steps to realise their securities by sale. The appellants paid several sums of money in order to clear the property, and instituted a suit against their vendor to recover the amounts so paid by them. The High Court held that, as the property was not actually subject to an effectual order for sale, the appellants were not compelled to make the payments to avert the sale, and that they were not entitled to any relief.

Held, reversing the High Court, that, under S. 55(1)(z). sub-S. (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, the appellants were entitled to recover from their vendor the monies paid by them either for redemption of the mortgages existing upon the property purchased by them, or for the purchase of the property on sales under such mortgages, or to prevent such sales.

Their Lordships find it difficult to accept the view of the High Court that purchasers of a property are not compelled to pay off mortgagees who have obtained decrees for sale, even though a sale is not immediately threatened. VENDOR'S STATUTORY OBLIGATION AS TO.

Contract excluding-What amounts to.

Property, which was in fact subject to more mortgages than one, was sold as being subject only to one mortgage in favour of one P. The deed of sale expressly stated that, apart from P's mortgage, " the property is up to this date free from all rights of transfer by sale, mortgage, " etc. The last portion of the sale deed provided that " If, God forbid, any person comes forward as partner or co sharer and brings a claim, or if an encumbrancer, etc, is found in respect of the whole, or, part of the property sold, and as a result of his claim the property pass out of the possession of the vendees," then the vendor should have certain obli-gations, and that was exclusive of all other rights on the part of the vendee.

Held, on a construction of the sale deed, that there was no contract in it excluding the statutory obligation that the seller is bound to discharge all incumbrances existing at the time of the sale.

The portion of the sale deed which states what is to ensue in the event of the vendees being put out of possession may be an additional safeguard, and may have been a thing suggested by the parties to cover contingencies which were not yet wholly foreseen, but it does not contradict or restrict the wider language of the contract of sale or narrow or wipe out the obligations under the statute. The appellant's solicitors, who proceeded to investigate the title made requisitions one of which related to the title of one C, who had professed to make a title as heir to his father, one of certain mortgages of the interest of M. Letters of Administration were on the application of the appellant, the wife of S, granted by the District Court of Amherst under the Probate and Administration Act to the 1st defendant, as son of S. to administer the estate of his father, S. and the suit property, amongst others, became vested in the 1st defendant as such administrator. Subsequently, an administration suit was instituted in the Chief Court of Lower Burma by the appellant on her own behalf and on behalf of her other children against, inter alia, the 1st defendant for the administration by the Court of the estate which was in his hands. A preliminary decree was made in the suit in the Chief Court which directed that certain accounts should be taken and certain enquiries made. and that the suit should stand adjourned for making a final decree until the accounts and inquiries had been taken and made, That court did not. however, appoint a Receiver or issue an injunction to the 1st defendant not to continue to act as an administrator under his appointment as an Administrator by the District Judge of Amherst. After the said preliminary decree, the 1st defendant obtained, under S, 90 of the Probate and Administration Act of 1881. as amended by Act VI of 1889, from the District Judge of Amherst permission to sell the suit property. The respondent bank offered to purchase the property from the 1st defendant "subject to a clear title", and the latter, on 10-7-1918, agreed to sell "subject to settlement being effected of any litigation relating to the same properties." The respondent Bank sub-equently sent a requisition on title to the 1st defendant, desiring to be informed what the litigation referred to in his letter of acceptance was, to which the 1st defendant replied stating that he referred to the administration suit pending in the Chief Court.

In a suit for specific performance brought by the bank, held that by 10-7-1918, the 1st defendant and the Bank had come to a complete agreement for the sale of the property in question to the Bank; that the condition that the agreement should be subject to a settlement of any litigation relating to the property before the agreement should take effect was a condition for the protection of the 1st defend-

A suit brought by G, a mortgagee of properties appertaining to the estate of a deceased person, against, inter alia-B, trustee for the liquidation of the debts of the deceased, to enforce the mortgage, was compromised on the terms, amongst others, that G should, at the request and by the direction of B, pay off certain other mortgages up to a particular amount, that the amount so paid by G should be added to his mortgage claim and carry interest at 7 per cent with quarterly rests, that, upon B making a marketable title to the sait property, the title should be accepted by G, and the purchase should be completed within one month from the date of the compromise, and that, if such purchase was not completed within the aforesaid period, then the interest on the part of the principal moneys secured by the said mortgage and further charges, namely, Rs. 2, 90 000 should cease to run and G should be deemed to be the owner of the property subject to the mortgage and charge aforementioned as well as all existing incumbrances on the property, and the whole of the said consideration money of Rs. 2,90 000 should ipso facto be set off against his claims under his mortgage and further charges.

----Vendor's undertaking as to-Compliance with-

In 1913 respondents agreed to sell land to appellant and undertook to deduce " a marketable title free from all reasonable doubts". The land had been mortgaged in 1892 to two joint mortgagees by an agreement of charge registered under the Registration Act, 1877, the deeds being deposited with the mortgagee. As evidence of the discharge of the mortgage respondents produced a certified copy of a release registered under the above Act and dated 30 9.02. This lease was executed by one only of the mortgagees, but recited that the other mortgagee was dead, that the executant was his beir, and that the mortgage had been redeemed. Appellant asked for evidence of these facts, but respondents refused to supply such evidence on the ground that the recitals in the release itself were sufficient proof of the facts recited. They also failed to produce one of the title deeds of the mortgaged property.

Held that the recitals in the release deed were not evidence against the joint mortgagee and that the agreement as to title had not been complied with. (Lord Parker.) SHRINIVASDAS BAVRI 2. MFHERBAR.

The suit was for possession of a four anna share of a Raj and Zemindary under a Bill of sale, purporting to be an also lute sale for the sum of Rs. 75,000, and executed by the appellant at a time when he was neither in the possession of the Zemindary, nor had established in any Court his title thereto. The case of the plaintiff-respondent was, that this Bill of Sale expressed the real contract between the parties, which was one for the absolute sale by the appellant and purchase by the respondent's predecessor in interest of the four-anna share specified for the price of Rs. 75,000, and that that sum was actually paid down in cash when the instrument was executed.

The case of the appellant was, that being in want of funds to carry on his suit for the Raj and Zemindary and for his own support, he applied to the respondent's predecessor in interest, who agreed to make advances for those purposes on condition of having the Bill of Sale executed, registered, and duly notified in the pending suit; that no part of the expressed consideration or sum of Rs. 75.000 was paid on the execution of the instrument; and that though the respondent's predecessor in interest, from time to time, advanced small sums of money, the whole amount of his advances fell far short of Rs. 75,000.

Held, on the evidence, that the real arrangement between the appellant and the respondent's predecessor in interest was for advances to be made, from time to time; and that the form of the contract was adopted in order to evade the effect of the decisions of the Indian Courts in respect of what they considered champerty (309). Plaintiff claimed the suit property under a conveyance executed by the widow of a deceased person. The defendants, the heirs-at-law of the deceased, alleged that they were the real owners of the property, that their mother had no title to convey the same, and that the conveyance was therefore not effectual to convey any title to the plaintiff. The question was whether the defendants were, by reason of representations made by them, estopped from disputing the validity of the conveyance. It appeared that, long prior to the date of the alleged representations, the plaintiff document in question not as a sale, but as a mortgage. The trial Judge was of opinion that that statement showed the impression that the vendor was under, and that it must be of the alleged representations.

·Purchaser's rights under.

The Court below seem to have ruled that the effect of the execution of a bill of sale by a Hindoo vendor is, to use the phrascology of English law, to pass an estate irrespectively of actual delivery of possession, giving to the instrument the effect of a conveyance operating by the statute of uses. To support such a conclusion, the execution of the bill of sale must be treated as a constructive transfer of possession. There can, however, he no such transfer actual or constructive, upon a contract under which the vendor sells that of which he has not possession, and to which he may never establish a title. The hill of sale in such a case can only be evidence of a contract to be performed in future, and upon the happening of a contingency (306-7). (Sir James W. Colvile.) RAJAH SAHIB PERHLAD SEIN :. The agreement recited that the defendant had agreed to buy the six villages for a sum of Rs. 4.23,000 (the amount then due under the mortgage being upwards of that amount), and provided by clauses 1 and 2 that the vendee should pay Rs. 5 000 earnest-money by cheque and one lakh to the Bank by a fixed date. Clauses 3 and 4 of the agreement were as follows :-

3. That the vendee will arrange with the Manager, Bank of Upper India, to get transferred from the said vendor's accounts to the said vendee's accounts the balance of the price, being Rs. 3, 23,000 to which the vendors give

4. The said vendors having hereby made a complete and conclusive sale to the said vendee, if there should be a dispute about transfer of the balance of the price with the Manager of the said Bank, the said vendee will be responsible as below :-

(a) That the said vendee will be liable for all interest after the 18th June, 1914, for the balance of price;

(b) should there be any litigation in connexion with the matter of transfer, the vendee will only be responsible for costs, etc., that may be awarded in such litigation.

By clause 5 the vendors " confirm this sale finally and agree to release and free the said villages from all encumbrances except in case of litigation as provided in clause 4". Clause 8 stated that the vendors agreed to give possession and to obtain mutation of names on payment of the lakh of rupees (which was eventually done).

The earnest-money and the lakh of rupees were duly paid. These sums reached the bank and were applied in reduction of the mortgages, and these sums, together with an independent advance of Rs. 1,800, by the defendant to the plaintiffs left the balance of the purchase-money outstanding at Rs. 3,16,000. Nothing further was arranged or paid. The defendant was never ready and willing to arrange the transfer which cl. 3 contemplated, up to the full extent of the balance of the price, and but, for his untenable objections, the transfer provided for in cl. 3 would have been arranged in the summer of 1914.

On a question arising as to the proper measure of damages for which the defendant was liable for failure to comply with the requirements of cl. 3 of the agreement, held, that the defendant was liable to the plaintiffs in a sum made up of Rs. 3,16,000 with interest at 7 per cent. (the rate provided for by the mortgage bond) from the date on which the transfer contemplated by cl. 3 could have been arranged until the date of payment, together with the taxed costs of the suit throughout. INTEREST ON-PURCHASER'S LIABILITY FOR.

Balance left with him to be paid towards incombrance on property, vendor to find remainder-Default on part of vendor-Arrangement that mortgage should be discharged and good title conveyed-Effect.

By a deed property was sold in consideration of Rs. 20,000, which sum was in the deed stated to be for paying the debts due to A and B, and the money was said in the deed to be "left with the vendees" for paying to the former Rs. 17,000 and to the latter Rs. 3,000. The latter sum was paid to B, but the former was not. The vendor's widow brought a suit against the vendees for the recovery of the said sum of Rs. 17,000 with interest thereon from the date of the sale upto the date of suit and also the costs of a suit by A against the ventior.

The facts were that at the time of the sale Rs. 22,000 were due to A, and there was also a mortgage to H and others upon which Rs. 15,000 were due. The evidence showed that the balance due to A and the noney due on the mortgage to B were agreed to be paid by the vendor, and the property sold released from mortgages.

The vendor failed to provide the money for this purpose and A brought a suit against him and obtained a decree for what was due to him with interest and costs, and the amount decreed was realised by A. The High Court gave a decree to the plaintiff for Rs. 3,000, the balance of Rs. 17,000 left after deducting the sum of Rs. 14,000 paid by the vendees with interest from the date of the decree of the Court below.

On appeal from the decree of the High Court their Lord-ships affirmed it.

The Rs. 17,000 were not left with the vendees simply as a deposit of the money of the vendor. They were to retain it as a security that the property sold should be freed from the incumbrances upon it and that they should have a good title. They were entitled to retain it until the vendor provided the rest of the money necessary for this purpose. Unless this was done a payment of the Rs. 17,000 would leave the property still incumbered, as A would only receive it, if he did so, in part payment of what was due. From the nature of the transaction it was not a deposit upon which the vendees would be liable to pay interest unless they refused or omitted to pay the money when they were informed by the vendor that he was prepared to pay the balance necessary to satisfy what was due to d. Without that balance they were not bound to pay or tender to him the Rs. 17,000. (Sir Richard Couch.) MUHAMMAD SIDDIO KHAN P. MUHAMMAD NASIR-UL-LAH KHAN.

Under an agreement for the sale of land, the balance of the purchase-money was to be paid on June 30th, 1912, and upon payment the vendor was to convey. The purchasemoney had all been paid excepting two sums of £, 3400 and £ 170 (being interest), which had been retained by the purchaser to meet his claim for compensation for the deficiency in the mileage of fencing. The purchaser proposed that, on payment of the rest of the purchase-money remaining unpaid, the vendor should convey without prejudice to his right of action for the two sums referred to, and he tendered the conveyance for execution without prejudice to his claim for shortage of fencing. The proposal was carried out, a conveyance being executed by the vendor and the purchaser entering into possession.

In a suit by the vendor for the recovery of the sums of £3,400 and £.170, the purchaser counter-claiming for compensation for misrepresentation as to the mileage of fencing on the land, the contract was silent as to the fencing but it was contended that on that subject the vendor's agent had made a material misrepresentation as to the mileage which induced the purchaser to enter into the con-

It was held by the High Court that no charge under 8. 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act ever arose, be-Cause the purchase was not in consideration of a sum of money, part of which was paid down and the payment of the balance of which was deferred, but it was a purchase in consideration of a particular covenant. There is no doubt, both on principle and authority, that a conveyance or sale in consideration of a covenant to pay a sum of money in the fatter to the consideration of a covenant to pay a sum of money in the future is different from a sale in consideration of money ich the purchaser covenants to pay. English law-Lien under-Origin and nature of-Dis-Dischion.

The charge which the vendor obtains under S. 55 (4) of the Transfer of Property Act for unpaid purchase-money is different in its origin and nature from the vendor's lien given by the Courts of Equity to an unpaid vendor. That lien was a creation of the Court of Equity, and could be modified to the circumstances of the case by the Court of Equity. The charge which the vendor in India has is a statutory charge. The law of India, speaking broadly, knows nothing of the distinction between legal and equitable property in the sense in which that was understood when equity was administered by the Court of Chancery in England, and the Transfer of Property Act gives a statutory charge upon the estate to an unpaid vendor unless it be excluded by contract. Such a charge, therefore, stands in quite a different position from a vendor's lien (245). (Lord Drivy.) WEBB r. MACHPERSON.

The purchaser made default, and, on a suit by him for specific performance being resisted by the vendor on that ground, urged that the latter could not avail himself of the default because the vendor's solicitor's form of mortgage had never been delivered or tendered to the purchaser to enable his own solicitors to prepare the mortgage-feed by which the balance of the purchase-money was to be secured to the

Held, over-ruling the purchaser's plea, that it was the duty of the interded mortgagor, the purchaser, to have the mortgage deed prepared, and that neither the vendor nor his solicitors were in any default in having omitted to furnish the form unasked (126). arese whether the purchaser could decline to pay the suit amount on the ground that he had been prevented from obtaining possession of the title deeds to the well, because the vendor refused to hand them over until the money due under the note was paid. It appeared that the purchaser did, while the money so due remained unpaid, try to get the title deeds from the vendor, in order that he might effect a re-sale. The vendor objected to hand them over, the purchase not having been completed. It did not appear that the purchaser at any time tendered a conveyance, which was the preliminary to registration.

Held, reversing the Court below, that the vendor was entitled to recover on the suit note.

There was no defence to the action for the amount due under the note, unless the purchaser could establish a counter-claim to set aside the main contract on the ground that the vendor had broken it by refusing to hand over the deeds. The purchaser was not entitled to obtain the deeds without first tendering a conveyance. And there is no evidence in the case that the purchaser ever tendered any conveyance or asked for a change in the register.

Mesne profits of property purchased—Bight to.

Postponement of, till his name is recorded in books of Collectorate-Agreement for-Proof of-Validity.

The appeal arose out of a suit brought by the respondent against the appellant for mesne profits of certain lands purchased by the former from the latter. The defendant pleaed, in har to the action, an agreement contained in an instrument, containing a condition that the plaintiff should have no claim to the profits, until his (the respondent's) name was entered in the Collector's books, and the whole case turned upon the question, whether that agreement was a genuine and valid deed, or, as contended by the respondent, a forged instrument.

Both the Courts below decided against the validity of the instrument.

Held, on a consideration of the evidence in and the probabilities of the case, reversing the concurrent findings of the Courts below, that the agreement was established by the evidence produced, that it must be carried into effect, and that consequently, the respondent was not entitled to the mesne profits claimed (443). The deed of agreement is in the name of the respondent, addressed to the appellant. It stated that the purchasemoney was not paid, but that a bond was given for it, conditioned for the payment of the money five days after the respondent's name should be recorded in the Collectorate; the bond was, during the interval, not to carry interest, and no claim was to be made for principal during that time. Though at first sight it may appear strange, that instead of actual payment, a bond should be taken, yet there are circumstances which tend to reconcile the arrangement with probability (438).

The vendor himself was not in possession of a part of the property purported to be sold. Suits at his instance were depending for the recovery of that property, and the results of such as the suits and the results of such as the suits and the suits are such as the suits are suits as the of such suits must in some degree have been uncertain. It was impossible, therefore, for the vendor to give possession of all the property purported to be sold, and, consequently, not improbable that the purchaser should decline to pay the purchaser. Parchase money until put in possession. There is nothing contrary to justice in the provision contained in the agreement, that during the period before the entry of the purcha-ter's name in the books of the Collectorate, no interest hould run upon the bond; and on the other hand, no part that the arrangement represented by the Bill of Sale was

POSSESSION OF-DEPRIVATION OF PART OF-DAMAGES FOR.

-Suit for-Maintainability - Sale collusive and fraudulent and intended to cheat infants-Purchaser

Some land was sold which at the time of the sale, belonged to a joint Hindu family consisting of five brothers to the plaintiffs-appellants. At the time of that sale, three of those brothers were minors, and therefore incapacitated from being parties to it. The deed purported to be executed by all the brothers, either each executing on his own behalf or the two executing on behalf of the other three. It appeared that the transaction was regarded by the plaintiffs as well as by the two elder brothers as open to question, because the plaintiffs thought it necessary to take an ikrarnama from the two elder brothers stating that the three brothers could not come to execute the deed of sale as they were not at leisure.

As soon as the younger brothers came of age they instituted a suit against the plaintiffs to recover their share of the property sold, and they succeeded in that suit. Thereupon the plaintiff instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the elder brothers for damages. The Courts below concurrently found that the sale was fraudulent and collusive on the part both of the adult brothers and the plaintiffs, their object being to defraud the minor brothers and dismissed the suit.

Held, that the decree of the Courts below was right.

It is not for the public benefit that a party engaged in a transaction such as this must now be taken to be, wherein both vendors and purchasers are aware that they are dealing with the property of infants, who have not by law the power of sale, and that they are obtaining possession of this property in a manner calculated to injure those infants, should be able to sue another party to the transaction for damages. The suit was for possession of a four-anna share of a rai and Zemindary under a Bill of Sale, purporting to be an absolute sale for the sum of Rs. 75,000, and executed by the appellant at a time when he was neither in the possession of the Zemindary, nor had established in any court his title thereto, and it was brought after the appellant had established his title and obtained possession. The court found really for advances to be made from time to time by the vendee, the plaintiff's assignor, that the deed was executed as a security for such advances, and that the vendee had advanced only a portion of the amount undertaken to be advanced by him. In the courts below the plaintiff rested his case on the footing that the Bill of Sale represented the real contract between the appellant and the plaintiff's assignor, which was one for the absolute sale by the former and purchase by the latter of a four-anna share for the price of Rs. 75,000, and that that sum was actually paid down in cash when the instrument was executed. In appeal before their Lordships it was contended for the plaintiff for the first time that complete justice could be done between the paties only by imposing upon the appellant the terms of repaying the advances actually made to him by the plaintiff's assignor.

Their Lordships declined to accept the contention,

Their Lordships do not see how they can do this in the present suit of which the dismissal will not prevent the recovery of those advances if they are still recoverable. They do not see how can they supply a new remedy by imposing terms upon the appellant, who is not in this suit seeking the aid of the court, but is sued upon a different and inconsistent cause of action. - Dismissal of Purchase money Subsequent suit for Bar of, under O. 2, R. 2 of C. P. C.

D, the karta of a joint Hindu family, governed by the Mithila law, sold a portion of the joint family property to the appellant in consideration of a sum of money then paid to him by the appellant. The appellant applied to the Collector for mutation of the share parchased by him into his name, but on objections made by the respondents, two of the members of D's family, the appellant's application was rejected. The appellant thereupon instituted a suit against D and the other members of his family, asking to have effect given to his purchase, and possession of the purchased share, with registration, decreed to him. The appellant did not in that suit ask in the alternative for return of the consideration money, in case he should not be held entitled to possession. That suit was dismissed.

In a suit subsequently brought by the appellant against the respondents, the surviving members of D's family, for recovery of the purchase-money paid by him with interest, the Sub-Judge held that the appellant ought, in his prior suit, to have included a claim to recover back the purchase-money, and that the subsequent suit was therefore barred under S. 43 of Civil Procedure Code of 1882. The High Court, on the other hand, held that it

Their Lordships considered it unnecessary to give any opinion upon that question, observing: "It may be a question of some difficulty in a case of this kind as to what is the effect of S. 43 of Civil Procedure Code." --- Dismissal of Specific performance Subsequent suit for Bar of, under 0.2, R. 2 of C. P. C.

defendants. The sale was to be completed and the balance of the price was to be paid after a certain time. The terms of the agreement were observed for a few months, the plaintiffs cultivated the estate, and paid off the mortgages, and made some other payments on behalf of the defendants, which left a balance of the purchase-money as due by the plaintiffs. Then disputes arose; the defendants interrupted the work of the plaintiffs, and finally instituted a suit for possession of the estate and for general reliefs. The plaintiffs filed a cross-suit in which they prayed for restoration of possession under S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, for damages for disturbance, and for an injunction to protect their possession and management. In both suits there was no relief prayed and no issue framed on any point except possession or compensation, The plaintiffs did not ask for completion of the agreement, nor the defendants for its cancellation. In both suits the defendants were held entitled to possession and not the plaintiffs, but the latter were held entitled to a temporary injunction restraining the defendants from interfering with the management,

In a suit subsequently instituted by the plaintiffs for the specific performance of the agreement for sale, held that the suit was barred under S. 43 of Civil Procedure Code of 1882.

Quaere whether the suit was also barred under S. 13 of Civil Procedure Code of 1882 on the ground that the plaintiffs might and ought to have put forward the claim to specific performance by way of defence to the vendor's suit against them.

The agreement was the cause of action in the prior suit by the plaintiffs. There was no other. The purchasers, it is true, sued only for possession; but independently of the agreement, they had no claim to the possession which was refused to them, nor to the management which was allowed to them. The vendors asserted that the agreement was no longer in force. The obvious course for the purchasers was to demand completion of it. For some reason or other they did not do so. They did make the agreement the basis of a claim for possession and damages. In this suit they make it a basis of a claim for transfer of the estate. But that is precisely what the Code says they shall not do. (2267). (Lord Hobhouse.) RANGAYYA GOUNDAN v. NANJAPPA (1901) 28 I. A. 221 = 24 M. 491 (503-4)= RAO. 6 C. W. N. 17=3 Bom. L. — Refund of purchase money in—Decree for—Grant of—Nature of purchase whether speculative merely or bona fide not properly raised and tried—Effect.

A purchaser of a leasehold property sued for possession thereof, and, failing in his attempt to recover possession as against a rival purchaser, asked for the repayment of the price which he had paid. The claim was never really investigated in the Courts below. It was never gone into as to whether this plaintiff's purchase was a truly speculative purchase or a purchase under such circumstances as would warrant a good title. Accordingly the Courts below declined to adjudicate upon that claim, and gave leave to the plaintiff to raise the question in a separate suit.

S, on behalf of himself and as guardian of his minor son K, sold a village to V for Rs. 10,000. On the same day the parties executed what was called a "counterpart document" by which it was provided that V should reconvey the said village to S and K after a period of thirty years from that date, i. e. in the Ani cultivation season of the thirtieth year, in case S or his son K wished to have the village again, and upon his paying to V the sum of Rs. 10,000.

Held that there was, by the "counterpart document," a completed contract made between V of the one part and S and K of the other part, by which V undertook for consideration to reconvey the property if the other parties to the contract offered to purchase the same at the time stated and for the amount mentioned in the "counterpart document," and that the counterpart document was not merely a standing offer by V, the benefit of which could not be assigned to a stranger, until the offer had been accepted by the tender of the amount in June 1920 (the Ani season of the thirtieth year), and the offer had ripened into a contract to buy and sell.

All the elements necessary to constitute a contract were present. There was an undertaking on the part of V to reconvey the village to S and K in the event of their calling for a conveyance at the time and upon the terms set out in the "counterpart document". The time at which the option was to be exercised and the price which was to be paid for the property were specified. There was consideration for the contract because V, by the sale obtained possession of the property, and S received Rs. 10,000, besides acquiring the right and benefit of getting back the village upon the conditions specified in the "counterpart document". #### Specific performance of-Vendor's right to.

Default on his part to deliver possession of property to purchaser-Effect.

Two deeds were executed on 9-12-1918, one, a deed of sale of the suit properties by the appellants to the 1st respondent, and the other an agreement of reconveyance by that respondent to the appellants. In a suit by the appellants for specific performance of the agreement to reconvey, held that, in the circumstances of the case, failure on the part of the appellants to deliver possession of the properties to the 1st respondent, even if under agreement to do so, was not conduct disentitling them to a decree for specific performance of their agreement for repurchase (891).

There was no default on the part of the appellants going to the root of the contract or any omission that could not have been amply compensated by directing the appellants on repurchase and by way of addition to the stipulated purchase price to account for any rents and profits received by them from the properties (891). The respondent being in possession of a Mouzah,upon which certain dues were owing to the Government, the land was advertised for sale by the authority of the Collector. The appellant, on the application of the respondent, was induced to give security for the payment of the duties due to the Government, and to take a security for the repayment of that sum. On that agreement two instruments were executed, a Pattah and Arace, both of which were necessary to authorise the Collector to make a transfer of the property to the appellant. Those instruments were, on the face of them, such as to authorise the Collector at once to make a transfer of the property, but as it was meant only as a security to a certain extent, the respondent executed a kararnamah, by which it was stipulated that if he should not pay the instalments fully, or that any part of them should be in arrear, the Zemindary should be continued under the appellant, consistently with that writing, and that the appellant should only return to the respondent the rupees which might have been paid by him. On the same day, however, the appellant executed a counter-kararnamah by which the plan of a conditional sale, entitling the appellant to retain the property, provided no (a?) default was made, was, in truth, reduced to a mortgage, with a covenant between the appellant and the respondent, that whenever he enabling him to discharge the amount for which he became security, as soon as he should have received out of the rents and profits the sums he had paid, with all expenses, he should restore the Mouzah to the respondent.

Held that the agreement embodied in the counter-kararnamah would not affect any other person to whom the appellant should transfer the property which he had acquired, but was one by which as long as the appellant held the property, he would be bound (20). REAL OWNER-VENDOR BEING.

Pleadings and evidence raising case of-Vendor only benamidar for vendee-Decision in appeal on foot of-Propriety.

The suit was by the heir of a deceased Mahomedan lady to recover possession of property belonging to her after setting aside (1) a mookhtarnama executed by the deceased in favour of f for the sale of the suit property and (2) a sale deed executed by him in favour of the defendants pursuant to the said mookhtarnamah. The defendants were the sons of one H. H was the original owner of the suit property, and had himself conveyed to the deceased prior to the dates of the deeds in question by duly registered deeds.

The defendants' case in their written statement and at the trial was that the property did belong to the deceased but was effectually conveyed away by the deeds in question-They did not set up the case that the conveyance by H to the deceased was itself a benami transaction, and the deceased a mere benamidar for H, that H had all along remained the owner, and that the conveyance by / was executed merely for the purpose of revesting the property in his sons, the defendants, by his direction as the real owner, Nevertheless the High Court rested its judgment in favour of the defendants on that ground.

Held that so wide a departure from the case made in the pleadings and at the trial could not be permitted (335, 337) (Sir Montague E. Smith.) MUSSAMUT MEHDI BEGUN (1876) 3 Suth. 333 = Bald. 71. v. ROY HURI KISHEN.

The plaintiff sued to recover possession of certain lands with mesne profits, and to set aside a deed of sale perported to have been executed by him in favour of one /. The plaintiff alleged that he agreed to sign, and that he execut-ed the deed of sale in consequence of pressure and duress put upon him, and in order to get back certain papers, etc., of his, which had been abstracted by the defendant and his servants. He did not set up the alternative case that, even if the deed was not executed by him under such personal duress as destroyed his free agency, and entitled him to treat his deed as a mere nullity, yet there existed circumstances which entitled him in equity to be relieved from it upon the terms of his accounting for the consideration received by him under the deed with interest; and there was no proof of those circumstances either. The deed was in fact found not to have been executed under duress as alleged by the plaintiff.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE AGAINST-RIGHT OF.

- Attachment subsequent to plaint contract but before execution of formal conveyance.

The respondent being a creditor of S. M. on 29th March, 1819, obtained an order in the nature of an attachment upon the three houses, the subject-matter of the appeal, and on 4th May. 1820, he obtained a further order authorizing the sale of those houses for the purpose of satisfying his decree debt. The appellant claimed to be a bone fafe purchaser of the said properties from S. M., under a deed of sale executed by him to the appellant on the 31st of March 1819. On the strength of that deed he claimed to be entitled to the properties free from the attachment effected at the instance of the respondent.

The Sudder Adawlut (the Court below) was of opinion that the deed relied upon by the appellant was not so complete a document as to warrant its interference with the attachment, not having all the requisites of a sale.

As to the objection to the validity of the deed relied upon by the appellant (assuming it to be genuine, and duly attested) founded upon the fact of its not being a complete and final deed of sale, inasmuch as the parties contemplated the execution of a more formal conveyance. hdd, reversing the Court below, that it was sufficient to bind the property, and to give to the appellant the right to demand a specific performance of the contract, and the execution of such further assurances as might be deemed necessary to invest him with a complete legal title to the houses which were the subjectmatter of the appeal, and that the attachment could not prevail against the appellant's title founded on the said deed. In exercising its jurisdiction over specific performance, a Court of Equity looks at the substance and not merely at the letter of the contract. If a vendor sues, and is in a position to convey substantially what the purchaser has contracted to get, the Court decrees specific performance with compensation for any small and immaterial deficiency, provided that the vendor has not, by misrepresentation or otherwise, disentitled himself to his remedy. Another possible case arises where a vendor claims specific performance and the Court refuses it, unless the purchaser is willing to consent to a decree on terms that the vendor will make compensation to the purchaser, who agrees to such a decree on condition that he is compensated. If it is the purchaser who is suing, the Court holds him to have even a larger right. Subject to considerations of hardship, he may elect to take all that he can get, and to have a proportionate abatement from the purchase-money. But this right applies only to a deficiency in the subject-matter described in the contract. It does not apply to a claim to make good a representation about that subject-matter, made not in the contract, but collaterally to it. It appeared, however, that, on 25-10-1920, the owner had entered into another contract for the sale of the same property to the appellants, and that Respondent No 1 took the conveyance with knowledge of that contract.

Held, in a suit for specific performance brought by the appellants, that Respondent No. 1 was entitled to rely on the earlier contract in his favour, and that his rights were not affected by his knowledge of the contract in appellants' favour before obtaining the conveyance. On a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell land brought, inter alia, against a subsequent purchaser of the suit property, it appeared that the latter had, in virtue of his claim to be purchaser, discharged mortgages on the property. In affirming the decree below in favour of the plaintiff their Lordships added a declaration that in respect of any moneys properly paid by the subsequent purchaser towards the discharge of mortgages upon the suit property he was entitled to a charge upon the property for any sums so paid by him which might have been rightfully due under the same mortgages. TWO PLOTS OF LAND-SALE OF, FOR ONE SPECIFIED SUM-CONTRACT FOR.

-Specific performance in regard to one of plot-Grant of-Specific performance in regard to other impor-

A contract for the sale of two plots of land for one specified sum required the vendor to make out a marketable title, and, in case of failure to do so, bound him to refund the deposit on demand. It also stipulated that, in case of any deficiency in the area or quantity of land, no compensation should be payable by the vendor on actual measurement. There was no general condition either providing for compensation or excluding it. The price fixed was a price for both plots together, and, in describing the steps to be taken as to making title, granting an assurance and receiving rents and profits, both plots were dealt with together as a whole, and there was nothing by which to separate them or to place one on a footing independent of the other. In fact, if it were not for the statement, of their areas and of their boundaries and locality, no separate and independent footing could be suggested or alleged to distinguish either from the other. It was not proved that the part of the contract which was left unperformed bore only a small proportion in value to the whole within S. 14 of the Specific Relief Act, and the purchaser had declined to accept relief on the terms of S. 15.

In a suit by the purchaser to enforce the contract, the vendor proved to be unable to make a title to the second plot. The Trial Judge offered the plaintiff a decree for the conveyance of the other plot on the terms of S. 15 of the Specific Relief Act, and, on the plaintiff declining the offer, dismissed the suit with costs. On the issue of damages for breach of the contract no evidence of material damage was given.

On appeal, the High Court, considering that the case fell within the terms of S. 16 of the Specific Relief Act, allowed the appeal, but, having before them no evidence whatever of the value or character of the plots beyond the particulars given in the contract, remitted the case to the Trial Judge in order that he might take evidence and assess the abatement of price to be allowed in respect of the failure to make title to one of the plots.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the suit should

TWO PLOTS OF LAND-SALE OF, FOR ONE SPECI-FIED SUM-CONTRACT FOR-(Contd.)

To make S. 16 applicable, it had to be shown that there was a part of the contract, to wit, that relating to plot B, which (a) "taken by itself could and ought to be specifically performed," and (b) "stood on a separate and independent footing" from the other part of the contract which admittedly could not be performed. Before a court can exercise the power given by S. 16 it must have before it some material tending to establish these propositions, and cannot apply the section on a mere surmise that, if opportunity were given for further inquiry, such material might be found to be sufficient. The words of the section, wide as they are, do not authorise the court to take action otherwise than judicially, and in particular do not permit it to make for the parties or to enforce upon them a contract, which in substance they have not already made for them selves. The expression "stands on a reparate and independent footing" points to a similation, which would exclude any new bargain, that cannot be said to be contained in the old one.

In the present case, but for the statement of the areas of the plots and of their boundaries and locality, no separate and independent footing could be suggested or alleged to distinguish either from the other. It may be that in the estimation of the parties at the time of the agreement one was more valuable than the other, bigha for bigha, or one was made more valuable than it would otherwise have been by the simultaneous acquisition of the other, apart from their respective areas. Nothing is stated about the quality or amenities of the land. It may be that, because both were sold together, the total price was less than the aggregate prices would have been, if both had been sold apart. To call the parties to give further evidence now is to try to make them agree on a new price, subject to settlement by the Trial Judge, if they differ; it is, in fact, to impose on them an arbitration, to which they have not submitted. To resort to expert evidence is to inquire what they ought to have agreed upon, though the fact is that, left to themselves, they did not choose to do so. To remand the case to the Trial Judge is to delegate to him a discretionary decision, which rested with the High Court itself in the view which it took of the appeal. (Lord Sumner.) WILLIAM GRAHAM P. After all, so long as the sale-deed in favour the plaintiffrespondent stands, it is no concern of the defendant-appellant's that the vendor, the real owner of the property conveyed and sued for, may have a grievance on the score of a misstatement as to consideration in an instrument to which the defendant-appellant is no party. The vendor himself has taken no steps to impeach the deed. On the contrary, in the course of the two years that elapsed, the vendor more than once affirmed the transaction. To resist the plaintiff's suit for possession based on the saie-deed, it is not enough for the defendant to make out that the sale-deed is voidable at the option of the vendor. A mortgagee in possession and another having sought to deprive the mortgagor of his title to redeem by means of a secret purchase of the mortgaged estate between them, including the fraudulent device of a sale by an auction for arrears of revenue, such arrears being designedly incurred by the mortgagee in possession, it was held that a suit for redemption and for possession instituted many years after the sale for arrears was not barred by S. 24 of Act I of 1845 requiring the suit to be brought within one year of the revenue sale (553-4).

The objection that the suit was barred under S. 24 of Act I of 1845 necessarily supposed the suit to be brought to set aside the revenue sale; this remedy, however, the suit did not seek, but, relying on the agreement for the secret purchase antecedent to the sale, the plaintiff claimed a right, as it were, to confess and avoid that sale, by imposing a trust on the estate which passed under it (553). By reason of the alleged agreement and the fraud of the mortgagee, the revenue sale must be considered as a private sale (559). (Sir Edward V. Williams). NAWAB SIDHEE NUZUR ALLY KHAN P. Decennial settlement-Tenure created before or since -Evidence-Hereditary Jaghire tenure.

The suit lands, being certain mahals comprised in a Zemindary, were, in 1775, granted by the Government by a Sanad to A, who had done and was doing service in repressing the incursion of wild elephants. That sanad contained no words of inheritance. On the death of A, the Government, in 1786, granted a second sanad to B and C. esented themselves as the heirs of A. That sanad did contain words of inheritance. In 1804, a suit was brought against B and C by the true heirs of 4 for possession of the lands. The Court declared the daintiffs in that suit to be the true heirs of A. and directed B and C to relinquish possession of the lands to the plaintiffs therein, treating, apparently, the former as trestees for the true heirs. But considering apparently, that it could not, without the sanction of Government, transfer the benefit of the second sanad from the persons named in it to the true owners, the court directed that the possession of the former should not be disturbed until an order should be issued by the Government. In consequence of this, a third sanad was granted in 1807. which recited the two former sanads, and continued the Jaghire to the true heirs of A. Under the three sanads, the lands comprised in the Jaghire were held rent-free for nearly a century. The Zemindary comprising the suit mahals was permanently settled in 1802.

Held that the tenure could not be held to have been first created by the third sanad of 1807, and could not be held to be a tenure created within the Zemindary since the perpetual settlement within the meaning of Act I of 1845 (455).and the same of all a selections and the

The effect of the second sanad of 1786 was to create an hereditary Jaghire tenure; and the settlement of the Zemindary was made upon the assumption of the subsistence of that hereditary Jaghire. The grant was perfectly good against the Zemindar, who could not have come into court to set aside the second sanad on the ground that the grantees had obtained it from Government by fraud or misrepresentation. That sanad was never in fact revoked or set aside by any court or authority. The decree in the suit between the real and pretended heirs of A made (subject to the sanction of Government) the latter trustees for the former, and directed them to relinquish the enjoyment of the lands accordingly. And the Government by the third sanad sanctioned that arrangement and confirmed the title of the true heirs. The Jaghire must therefore he held to be a tenure created before, and subsisting at the time of, the Decennial Settlement; and, consequently, it is within the exception of S. 26 of Act I of 1845 (455-6). #### SALT.

-Manufacture of - Government's exclusive right to-Measures adopted to secure-Salt-producing lands-Government's assumption of-Compensation to owners of land -Measures adopted for.

The Government of India has always claimed, as indeed the Native Governments to which it succeeded had done, the sole right to all salt produced within its territory, and the revenue derived from salt has always been treated as quite distinct from that derived from land. Before the year 1780 the Government had been in the habit of letting the salt-producing districts, which were commonly unfit for agricultural purposes, to farmers, who might or might not be the owners of the adjacent lands, and it was only in the latter part of the last century that some preferential claim to a lease of such districts was admitted on behalf of tha Zemindar within whose Zemindary they were situated (183.4).

In the year 1780 the Government determined on assuming what is called in the Regulations a monopoly of salt, but which may be more correctly described as the exclusive right to manufacture it. They accordingly took all saltproducing lands into their own hands, working them by agents commonly called salt agents. The Zemindars who were thus deprived of their lands were compensated by certain remissions and allowances. To require a Zemindar from whom a portion of his land had been taken, to continue to pay rent for that portion would have been obviously unjust. So much rent therefore as he would probably have obtained for the land he had kept it in his possession, and which was usually estimated on the footing of 11 anna per head on the men who would probably be employed in the salt manufacture, was remitted to him. The remission was thus carried into effect. He was still assessed on the whole Zemindary, but the estimated rent of the "Khalari," or salt land, was treated as payable by the Salt Department, and debited to them. This payment or debit was assumed to enure for the benefit of the Zemindar, and he was credited with it; the effect of this arrangement being that, although he was nominally charged with the jumma due on all the land geographically within his Zemindary, he was in reality charged only with so much of the jumma as appertained to that land which he retained in possession. A further allowance called mushuhara (monthly allowance) was sometimes made to him in respect of profits which he

further allowance of salt itself (184). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA D. RANI (1881) 8 I. A. 172= ANUNDMOYI DEBI. 8 C. 95 (103-4)=4 Sar. 281.

-Review of -Civil Court's jurisdiction as to.

The question to whom a Saranjam or jaghir shall be granted upon the death of its holder is one which belongs exclusively to the Government, to be determined upon political considerations and it is not within the competency of any legal tribunal to review the decision which the Government may pronounce. This principle is clearly expressed, not for the first time, in Bombay Act VII of 1863, s. 2, cl. 3, and is recognised in cases where the question has been raised (68). (Lord Hannen.) INCIDENTS OF.

Data for accertaining, in absence of deal of grant. It is no doubt correct to say that the fact that the Saranjamdar is in a sense a life-tenant does not alter the ordinary incidents of a grant by way of saranjam. But what those ordinary incidents are, must be ascertained, when there is no deed of grant forthcoming, from (a) the evidence, if any, in the case; (b) from legislative enactments; and (c) from judicial decisions. #### Mahratta saranjams.

-Nature and classes of Occupancy tenants on land included in grant existing previously to and at time of grant—Saranjamdor's rights as against—Grant of soil itself.

Amongst the Mahrattas the term "saranjam" was applied specially to a temporary assignment of revenue from villages or lands for the support of troops or for personal military service, usually for the life of the grantee; also to grants made to persons appointed to civil offices of the State to enable them to maintain their dignity, and to grants for charitable purposes. These were neither transferable nor hereditary, and were held at the pleasure of the sovereign. They were divided into two classes-namely, (a) grants of revenue only, i. c., of the royal share of the produce of the lands comprised in the grant, and (b) grants of the soil itself. It would seem to follow from the nature of Saranjams that whether they were grants of the soil itself or of the revenue only of specified lands, they could not and were not meant to interfere with rights in those lands existing previously to and at the time of the grant. If and so far as there were occupancy tenants on those lands, they would retain their right of possession (whether it can be called ownership or not is immaterial) but subject to paying the assessed land revenue (i.e., the royal share of the produce) payable before the grant to the Government and after the grant to the grantee. On principle, the grantee would not, unless specially authorized, be able to convey a larger title than his own. He could not convey a permanent title to any portion of the land, either by sale or by lease. Such sale or lease might be good against himself but would be void as against the grantor (368-9). The plaintiff, claimed to be the son of one A', deceased, and as such son to be entitled to certain properties alleged to have been held by A' by a tenure known as Saranjam, and certain other properties alleged to have been held by a tenure known as inam. The plaintiff also claimed the property as devised to him under the will of K'. He sought to recover possession from the defendant of the Saranjam and inam lands of which (as the plaintiff alleged) the defendant had been put into wrongful possession by the Bombay Government after the death of K'.

The Court below held that the Government had power not only to resume the Saranjam, but also the so-called inam property, and to assign them to whom it pleased. And the question for decision in the appeal was whether

Held, on the evidence in the case affirming the Court below, that a mixed estate of Saranjam and inam was granted to K by the treaty of July, 1820, to be held by him as a personal and military jaghir, that the tenure thereby created was political, that no distinction could be made between the inam and the other property, that both passed intact to the person whom the Government might recognise as the head of the family, and that it was not competent for any court of law to dispute it (68-9). The appellant, who was a member of a firm, was authorised by the guardian of two minors by a power of-attorney to act for the guardian in collecting and investing the minor's property. Acting under that authority funds were received and remittances made from time to time by the appellant's firm with whom an account was opened in the name of the minors. A certain amount due to the minors from a debtor was paid by him in the shape of crediting it to the appellant's firm in their account with their bankers which account was overdrawn. The minor's account with the appellant's firm was duly credited with that amount. The appellant being thereafter asked to give a guarantee for the funds of the minor in his hand, gave security to the satisfaction of the authorities. Thereafter criminal proceedings were instituted against the appellant who was tried and convicted of having embezzled the minors' money.

The mixture of the funds of another with one's own funds may be in many cases natural and proper, in other cases convenient but irregular, and in the third, both irregular and criminal. The distinctions between these cases require to be treated with the greatest judicial care, so as, while preserving the amplest civil responsibility, to prevent the third or criminal category from being extended to mistaken though convenient acts. A court of justice cannot reach the conclusion that crime has been committed unless it be a just result of the evidence that the accused in what was done or omitted by him was moved by the guilty mind (Lord Shaw.) No countenance can be given to the view that the language of S. 216 of the Scychelles Penal Code can be used to rank within the category of crime, conduct, or actions which do not essentially partake of the nature of embezzlement in the sense in which that term is ordinarily and properly understood. Although the term "embezzle" is supplemented by the terms "squander away or destroy" the whole context and view of the section show that the latter expressions are amplifications or exemplifications of the operations which are of the nature of embezzlement, in the sense that the conduct which is libelled has been a wilful appropriation by the accused of the property of another, or, after possession of the same had been acquired, of the wilful squandering or struction of it to his prejudice. In a case in which a contract was expressed to be made with the Secretary of State in Council, pursuant to the Act of 1858 for the better government of India, and was made with the concurrence of a majority of the Council, to be paid for out of the revenues of India as required by that Act, and without any personal liability on the Secretary of State, it was orged that it was not with the Secretary of State at all that the contract was made, but with a corpora-

SECUNDERABAD CANTONMENT.

——Military authorities in—Land in Cantonment forming Hyderabad territory—Grant of—Validity.

When the Nizam's Government admitted a British force within its territory, and allotted to it the Secunderabad cantonment as its headquarters, it no doubt by necessary implication conveyed to the military authorities all powers of jurisdiction, control, and management incident to maintaining the efficiency and the discipline of the troops and the peace and good order and convenient use of the cantonment. But it would be going a long way beyond this to hold that the officer commanding the troops could be held empowered to alienate in perpetuity land forming part of the cantonment, and undoubtedly Hyderabad territory for a purpose wholly unconnected with military requirements. In a case in which a grant was made rent-free and in lieu of service, the grantee subsequently ceased to render service, and he, his son, who took the property on his death, and the mother of that son, who took it on the son's death, continued to pay a sum of Rs. 29 per annum in lieu of the service, held that the condition of the tenure must be held to have been altered from service to rent at Rs. 29 per annum. On the construction of the sunuds by which a talook in a Zemindary was granted, held that the sunuds were grants of the land subject to certain services, namely, the service of paying a small rent of Rs. 245-12-0, and also of performing ghatwali duties; that they were not the hiring of a servant, giving him certain land by way of wages, but grants of land upon the condition of certain services (184-5). -Evidence-Resumption on ground of services not being required.

The appellant was the owner of a sixth share of the zemindari of Nuzvid, and sued for the resumption of the mokhasa village called H, which fell within that share. There was no deed or sanad containing the particulars of the grant under which the village was held by the mokhasadars, but the evidence showed that the village had been held by the mokhasadars and their ancestors on a quit-rent of Rs. 144 per annum from a period antecedent to the introduction of the British Government, and that the service to be rendered was that of one naik and fourteen peons, whose duty it was to guard the zemindar's fort and treasury, to watch over the reaping and threshing of the crops and to attend the zemindar on his hunting or military expeditions. The question for decision was whether the zemindar could dispense with the services and resume the land.

Held, that the grant was a grant subject to a burden of service, and was not a mere grant in lieu of wages, and that as the mokhasadars were willing and able to perform the services, the zemindar had no right to put an end to the tenure whether the services were required or not.

upon the following considerations:—

(1) No office by any particular designation was conferred upon the original grantee, but an obligation of a feedal character was imposed upon him. He was simply to provide a specified number of men as custodians, so to speak, of the Zemindar's property, and their services were rendered intermittently, and not continuously. Besides, they were paid in money when they actually performed such

(2) The mokhasadars had paid a uniform rent of Rs. 144 a year for 120 years prior to sait without alteration at any time, and the land had descended from father to son hereditarily. There had been no instance of resumption or even an attempt at resumption during all the time. There had also been no attempt to enhance or to alter the rent, or to interfere with the devolution of the property from heir to heir. (Sir Andrew Scoble.) A grant of an estate burdened with a certain service may be so expressed as to make the continued performance of the services a condition to the continuance of the tenure. Different kings of.

Grant burdened south service-Grant of office r.munerated by use of lands-Grant made partly as reward for past and partly as inducement for future services-Remmability of-Conditions.

In every case the right to resome a service grant must depend in a great measure upon the nature of the particular tenure, or the terms of the particular grant (464).

There is a clear distinction between the grant of an estate burdened with a certain service and the grant of an office the performance of whose duties are remanerated by the use of certain lands (464). Assuming a grant to be of the former kind, their Lordships do not dispute that it might be so expressed as to make the continued performance of the services a condition to the continuance of the tenure. But, in such a case, either the continued performance of the service would be the whole motive to, and consideration for, the grant, or the instrument would, by express words, declare that, the service ceasing, the tenure should determine (464-5).

A provision that the tenure shall cease if and when any of the services cease to be performed is something very different from one which merely casts upon the grantee the performance of certain duties so long as they are necessary. The former makes the grant determinable when there is no occasion for the services. But in the latter case, if the operation of any natural cause removes the necessity for the services, the grantee will hold the lands practically freed from the condition originally imposed upon him (465).

A grant made pro servities impensis it impendendir partly as a reward for past, partly as an inducement for future, services is not liable to be resumed because there is no longer any occasion for the performance of the particular service, though it may be liable to forfeiture if the grantee wilfully fail in the performance of his duty (465-6). The laws and usages of eastern countries where Christianity does not prevail are so at variance with all the principles, feelings, and habits of European Christians that they have usally been allowed by the indulgence or weakness of the Potentates of those countries to retain the use of their own laws, and their factories have for many purposes been treated as part of the territory of the sovereign from whose dominions they come. But the permission to use their laws by European settlers does not extend those laws to Natives within the same limits, who remain to all intents and purposes subjects of their own sovereign, and to whom European laws and usages are as little suited as the laws of the Mahomedans and Hindoos are suited to Europeans (425). ed or harbarous country, they carry with them not only the laws, but the sovereignty of their own state; and those who live amongst them and become members of their community become also partakers of, and subject to, the same laws (424).

But this was not the nature of the first settlement made in India-it was a settlement made by a few foreigners for the purpose of trade in a very populous and highly civilised country, under the Government of a powerful Mahomedan ruler, with whose sovereignty the English Crown never attempted nor pretended to interfere for some centuries afterwards (424-5).

If the settlement had been made in a Christian country of Europe, the settlers would have become subject to the laws of the country in which they settled. It is true that in India they retained their own laws for their own Government within the factories, which they were permitted by the ruling powers of India to establish; but this was not on the ground of general international law, or because the Crown of England or the laws of England had any proper authority in India (425). ## SETTLEMENT COURT.

-Decision of -Binding nature of, in civil suit between parties.

In certain proceedings before the Settlement Court which took place in 1867-68 concerning the right to succession to the estate of J, who had died in 1862, questions were raised amongst the several claimants to the estate inter alia as to whether Indar Kuar, the daughter of J was not excluded from inheritance under a family custom and whether B who claimed to be the agnatic heir of J was in fact what he alleged to be, viz, the son of the adopted son of Z, the father's brother of J. The Settlement Court decided that Indar Kuar was entitled to hold the estate in the limited interest of a Hindu daughter as provided by the Benares School of Hindu law, and that B was, at the date of the decision, the reversioner expectant, his relationship to J as alleged by him being established. In 1909, Indar Kuar entered into a compromise with her deceased son's widow under which it was agreed that Indar Kuar should hold the estate for her life and that on her death her son's widow was to be the owner. In a suit by B as reversionary heir to J on the death of Indar Kuar for a declaration that the agreement between her and her son's widow was invalid and not binding on B (the plaintiff), held-

SETTLEMENT DEED.

Contingent interest in corpus on youngest child attaining 20 given by.

Transferability of Vested interest in income given Effect-T. P. Act, S. 6 (a) and (e)-Effect.

By a settlement deed, the settlor transferred substantially the whole of his property to trustees in trust to allow the settlor during his lifetime to manage the property, and to have the sole benefit of income both from the immoveable and moveable properties. The settlement then proceeded to deciare certain trusts that should come into operation after his death. Those trusts were that, as to the property comprised in three schedules, the trustees during the life of the settlor's widow and until the youngest child attained the age of 20, were to distribute the income in the manner provided, namely, that they were to pay Rs. 1,000 a month to the widow, and to divide the remainder amongst the children, including the eldest son, C. After the youngest child attained the age of 20, the property was to be sold, and the proceeds were to be divided in equal shares between the children then surviving, the issue of any child who was dead to represent his father's share. There was a slight alteration in the trust in relation to the property comprised in the fourth schedule, because in that case the property was not to be distributed until the death of the youngest child, and it was to be divided then amongst the children living at that date.

Held that the result of the disposition under the settlement deed was to create, first of all, a rested interest in all the children in the income of the property and secondly a contingent interest in all the children in the corpus in respect of all the property until, at any rate, the youngest child reached the age of 20; and that the contingent interest which the children took was something quite different from a mere possibility of a like nature of an heir apparent succeeding to the estate, or the chance of a relation obtaining a legacy, within the meaning of section 6 (a) of the Transfer of Property Act, and also something quite different from a mere right to sue within S. 6 (r) of the same Act.

The contingent interest, which the children took, is a wellascertained form of property-it certainly has been transferred in this country for generations—in respect of which it is quite possible to raise money and to dispose of it in any way that the beneficiary chooses. ## Malikana-Settlement fixing. Permanent or temporary.

The appeal arose out of suit brought by the appellant to establish a claim to be paid an annual sum of Rs. 482 0-3 by the Government of India by way of dasturat or malikana in respect of certain land known as mouza S. The claim was based upon an order of 10th May 1865 by which the appellant alleged that the annual malikana payable to him in respect of the land was permanently fixed at Rs. 482-0-3. The defence was that the malikana payable in respect of a jagir of which, mouza S formed part was settled in 1780 at Rs. 796-2-9, and nothing further was recoverable and that the order of 1865 did not give the right claimed. The appellant admitted regular receipt of the sum of Rs. 796-2-9 but claimed to be paid the sum of Rs. 482.0-3 in addition. His contention was that the fixing of the malikana in 1780 was not a final ascertainment of the rights of his predecessors in title in respect of it, but was mevely a temporary fixing of the percentage by which the amount should be ascertained from time to time, as it varied, together with the variation of the amount of the proceeds of the land. Held, affirming the decisions of the courts below, that what was done in 1780 amounted to a final settlement of the owner's rights in respect of the malikana, that the settlement of 1865 did not on its true construction provide for any alteration of or addition to the malikana so fixed, and that the conduct of the parties since the settlement had been consistent with this construction. Life interest to doner—Reservation of—Effect.

The reservation of a life-interest by the executant of an instrument is no doubt a circumstance tending towards the Conclusion that the instrument is one operating inter vivus, and is not merely a testamentary instrument. And if the instrument had been an English instrument prepared by an English conveyancer, that circumstance would have afforded a very strong argument. The same weight cannot be attached in the case of an instrument prepared by an unprofessional native. The will being not a very familiar instrument to the people of India, a testator in India often does expens a great anxiety that he shall not be considered to have parted with anything in his lifetime, and their Lord-

-Oudh talukdar-Deed by.

An instrument executed by an Oudh talookdar ran as follows:-

I, M, am the talukdar of R, etc., in the Sitapur district.

"Whereas —I hold and enjoy possession of my estate situate in the Sitapur district, I, while in the enjoyment of sound health and mind, without reluctance or coercion, assign (tamlik) the said property to my younger brother, B, subject to the following conditions:—

"1. That during my lifetime, I shall hold and enjoy possession of it; and that after my death my aforesaid brother B shall hold and enjoy the same like myself;

"2. That whereas I am childless, should a legitimate and self-begotten child be born to me, it shall become the owner of one-half of the estate, and R shall be owner of the other half;

"3. That after my death B shall be bound like myself to maintain and take care of my wife. Hence I have written out these few words in the way of a deed of assignment (tamliknamah) so that it may witness in future."

The document was duly signed and attested by three witnesses. On 1-7-1871, the Registration Act (VIII of 1871) came into force, and on 3-7-1871, the document was registered according to its provisions as a will.

On 19-11-1879 M died without issue, never having had Held that, in view of what were the substantial characteristics of the document, setting aside mere matters of form and what might be considered as technical expressions, the reasons for holding it to be a will had a decided preponderance over those which would lead to the conclusion that it was a deed (142-3).

The document answers the definition of a will in S. 2 of Act V of 1869. It was registered as a will with the full knowledge and assent of the executant. It provides for contingencies which are not ascertainable, or may not be ascertained, until the death of the testator; for instance, the contingency of his having a child, which he had not at the time of the will, and the contingency of his leaving a widow surviving him. It does not purport to give to any body any possessory or present interest until the death of the executant. And it makes a gift to the children of the executant, which, if it be a deed of transfer operating at once, cannot take effect, because no child was in existence; whereas, if it is a will, the gift may perfectly will take effect. All those are very strong indicia of a testamentary character (141).

- Ond't talublar - Official inquiries as to who should be heir - Petition in answer to.

The last holder of an Oudh talook was a lady, who had been recognised by the Government, and whose title had been established by sanad granted in July, 1862. Before the issue of the sunned, inquiries were made by executive officers to ascertain the views of the thakurain concerning the succession to her estate. Her answer was stated in a petition (marked A-3) which ran as follows:—

"Your petitioner was much honoured by service on her of your order, inquiring as to the heir-apparent to the estate. Your petitioner begs to submit that since she is issueless, she appoints S to be her heir. She shall be the proprietor during her lifetime and shall (herself) manage the estate affairs, and, after her death, S shall become the proprietor (malik) of the estate. Therefore during her lifetime she declares S to be her heir, and this application is submitted by way of a deed of inheritance in order that it may be a sanad, and be of use when required."

On the very next day after the date of the petition (A-3) the thakurain wrote a letter to the father of S, which ran as follows:—

"I request you to give S to me. During my litetime 1 will be the proprietor. I make S my heir and proprietor of this estate, after me. I make S proprietor and landlord of this Raj, the Gaera (estate) after me."

It was contended that the petition (A-3) operated to transfer the estate, and that by it the thakurain's absolute interest became an estate for life with remainder to S, or became burdened with a trust having the same effect. Held, over-ruling the contention, that the document was merely testamentary.

This is not one of the cases in which a sunnud has been obtained in consequence of some promise by the grantee. The thakurain's petition (A-3) was not founded on any valuable consideration moving to her. In answer to an inquiry who was heir-apparent to the estate, she says she appoints S to be her heir. Though she speaks of her petition as a sunnud and a deed of inheritance, it is highly improbable that she had in her mind any idea so novel to her people as the idea of turning her inheritance into an estate for life with remainder to a collateral relative. Doubtless her idea was that she was simply pointing out who should take through her by inheritance; and if she had then died her nominee would have been quietly installed. official inquiries as to successors had reference to the critical state of the country, and it was not their object to derogate from the hereditary transferable right which had been promised to the thalookdars, and which was expressed in the sunnud soon afterwards granted to the lady.

The letter to the !ather of S is to the same effect with the declaration of the day before. In effect the thakurain informs the father of S of her inclinations towards S. But there was no contract with the father and no consideration moving from him. (Lord Hobbouse.) BALBHADDAR SINGH v. SHEO NARAIN SINGH.

The proprietary rights in certain mouzahs, which were originally vested in the plaintiffs, became vested in Government by reason of their purchase at a sale for arrears of revenue. The question was whether the Government had ever parted with those proprietary rights to the plaintiffs, entitling them to maintain the suit out of which the appeal arose to have it declared that they were at the date of suit entitled to the proprietary rights in the estate. The plaintiffs contended that the proprietary rights were parted with by the Government, and substantially regranted to the plaintiffs by the revenue settlement which was entered into with them in the year 1860.

Held that the officer appointed at that settlement to consider the amount of assessments had no judicial power to exercise, and consequently he had no power to convey away the proprietary rights of the Government.

RULE-EXCEPTION.

Deck cargo-Exception in case of Scope of Reason for- Jettison of deck goods-Remedy of owner of goods against master and owner of ship.

The second exception to the rule of contribution for general average is in the case of deck cargo. The reason why relief by general contribution is denied to the owners of goods stowed on deck, when these are thrown overboard in order to save the cargo under hatches, is obvious. According to the rules of maritime law, the placing of goods upon the deck of a sea-going ship is improper stowage, because they are hindrances to the safe navigation of the vessel; and their jettison is therefore regarded, in a question with the other shippers of cargo, as a justifiable riddance of incumbrances which ought never to have been there, and not as a sacrifice for the common safety. But the owner of deck goods jettisoned, though not entitled to general contribution, may nevertheless have a good claim against the master and owners of ship who received his goods for carriage upon deck; and the exception does not apply, either (1) in those cases where, according to the established custom of navigation, such cargoes are permitted, or (2) in any case where the other owners of cargo have consented that the goods jettisoned should be carried on the deck of the ship (247-8). In the case of a general ship, the owner of goods sacrificed for the common benefit has a lien upon each parcel of goods salved belonging to a separate consignee for a dee proportion of his individual claim. The cargo not being in his possession or subject to his control, his lien can only be enforced through the ship-master, whom the law of England, following the principles of the Law of Rhodia, regards as his agent for that purpose. The duty being imposed by law upon the master, he is answerable for its neglect (245). (Lord Watton.) STRANG, STEEL & CO. (1889) 16 I. A. 240= r. A. Scott & Co. 17 C. 362 (368)=5 Sar. 338.

Jettison.

-Contribution in cases of-Rule as to-Origin and hasis of.

The rule of contribution in cases of jettison has its origin in the maritime law of Rhodes. The principle of the rule has been the frequent subject of judicial comment. Lord Bramwell said that, to judge from the way in which contribution is claimed in England, "it would seem to arise from an implied contract inter se to contribute by those interested". The present Master of the Rolls disputed that view, and stated his opinion to be that the right to contribution "does not arise from any contract at all, but from the old Rhodian laws, and has been incorporated into the law of England as the law of the ocean. It is not as a matter of contract, but in consequence of a common danger, when natural justice requires that all should contribute to indemnify for the loss of property which is sacrificed by one, in order that the whole adventure may be saved." Whether the rule ought to be regarded as matter of implied contract, or as a conon of positive law resting upon the dictates of natural justice, is a question which their Lordships do not consider it necessary to determine. The principle upon which contribution becomes due does not appear to them to differ from that upon which claims of recompense for salvage services are founded. But, in any aspect of it, the rule of contribution has its foundation in the plainest equity. In jettison, the rights of those entitled to contribution and the corresponding obligations of the contributors, have their origin in the fact of a common danger which threatens to destroy the property of them all; and these rights and obligations are mutually perfected whenever the goods of some of the shippers have been advisedly sacrificed, and the property of the others has been thereby preserved (246.7). Jettison-(Contd.)

General average - Contribution for - Owners of jettisoned eargo-Owner of thip - Rights of - Master's fault-Jettison occasioned by.

Steamship A, with a general cargo ran aground. Part of the cargo was thrown overboard in order to lighten the vessel, which was got off by that means, and was enabled to reach the destination in safety. The respondents and other consignees were required to make a deposit of a certain percentage upon the value of their goods before delivery "against probable average claim." The respondents paid the required deposit under protest, and obtained delivery of their goods. Thereupon they instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose for a declaration that they were not liable to contribute for general average on account of either ship or cargo, because the grounding of the ship. and the consequent jettison of part of the cargo, were due to the negligence and misconduct of her master.

The lower court found, as a fact, that the stranding of the ship was occasioned by the negligent navigation of the master, and held, as a matter of law, that no claim for general average arose to the owners of cargo jettisoned because the peril which necessitated jettison was induced by the fault of the ship.

Held, that the fault of the master being matter of admission, it was clear upon authority, that no contribution could be recovered by the owners of steamship A. unless the conditions ordinarily existing between parties standing in that relation had been varied by special contract between them and their shippers; but that the negligent navigation of the master could not afford any pretext for depriving those shippers whose goods were jettisoned of their claim to a general contribution (248). The shippers whose goods were jettisoned were not privy to the master's fault, and were under no duty, legal or moral, to make a gratuitous sacrifice of their goods, for the sike of others, in order to avert the consequences of his fault. The Rhodian law, which in that respect is the law of England, bases the right of contribution not upon the causes of the danger to the ship and cargo, but upon its actual presence; and such exceptions as are recognised are in truth limitations on the rule, which have been introduced from equitable considerations, in the case of actual wrongdoers, or of those who are legally responsible for them. The owners of goods thrown overboard having been innocent of exposing the steamship A and her cargo to the sea peril which necessitated jettison, their equitable claim to be indemnified for the loss of their goods is just as strong as if the perilhad been wholly due to the action of the winds and waves (248-9).

The proposition that " when a jettison is justified by the dreamstances in which it takes place, and these circumstances are occasioned by the fault of the master or his want of care or skill, the jettison would give no claim for contributton; but the owners of the ship would be liable to the owners of the goods jettisoned for the damages caused by the wrong doing of the master " is inaccurate, in so far as it bears that no claim of contribution will arise to the owners of jettisoned cargo in the case supposed (249-50). ## Light-Rule as to-Rule of port.

-Sailing rule of international obligation- Applicability-Foreign ressel anchored, perhaps in a fairway, but certainly on the high sca.

The sait was brought by the respondent, as the master of a barque called the "Michelino", for the recovery of damages in consequence of a collision which took place between the "Michelino" and the "Dacca". The "Michelino" was an Italian barque, lying about three miles from the fairway buoy of the pilot's station near the entrance of the Rangoon river. She had been at anchorage there for some days. The collision took place by the stem of the "Ducca" running amidships into the port side of the other vessel while at anchor.

The defence which the "Docca" set up was that the harque" Michelino" had not, at the time, a proper light, in the sense of not being sufficiently bright, and that the light was not placed at a proper place. A rule of the port of Rangoon was relied upon which provided that all vessels in the port and in the roadstead there should carry a light upon their starboard foreyard arm. There was no question in the case that that rule was not complied with.

Semble, in the circumstances of the case, rule of the port of Rangeon relied upon was not binding upon the barque

"Michelino" (410).

The "Michelino" appears to have been anchored, perhaps in a fairway, but certainly on the high sea. Their Lordships, therefore, are not by any means satisfied that the rule was binding upon this foreign vessel; and it would he a question deserving of very great consideration whether, in these circumstances, the rule which was binding upon her was not rather the sailing rule, which is of international obligation, and which enjoins that the light shall be carried, where it can be best seen, not higher than 20 feet (410). A shipowner and a shipper are perfectly free to make a stipulation freeing the shipowner from liability for goods consigned.

There is no very close analogy between a case where it is sought to get rid of a legal obligation, which is presumed to he the basis of every contract of carriage by sea, and a case like this, where the parties are perfectly free to make any stipulation they please, unembarrassed by any implied condition, or any original underlying obligation. -Fire-Loss by, evering to alleged negligence-Suit for damages for-Onus of proof in-Duty of shipowner to lay all available materials before court.

The suit was in respect of two parcels of jute laden on board the flat " Jattrapore" for carriage, on the terms of certain bills of lading, and the plaintiffs sued in respect of a loss of the jute by fire.

The flat proceeded to her destination; but when she reached her discharging berth the consignees were not ready to take delivery. The flat with other cargo on board was then taken further down the Hooghly, and ultimately moored head and stern to two buoys, near a wharf called Nintollah Ghat. She was moored with head up river out-

Loss of goods-Shipowner's liability for-(Contd.) side another flat called the " Coleroon ", which was fast to the same buoys. There were other flats further in shore. She had been in that position two or three days when a fire broke out on board the "Coleroon". The fire spread to the " Jattrapore ", and though the latter was ultimately got clear and towed away down river, so much mischief had been done that the greater part of the jute in question was destroyed. In those circumstances the plaintiffs sued the defendant company for that the company had not delivered the goods in accordance with the bill of lading, and afterpatively for not taking care of the goods and saving them from the fire. The flat having arrived at the wharf at which delivery should have been taken, and the plaintiffs having neglected to take delivery in due course, the responsibility of the defendant company was thereafter only that of an ordinary bailee.

The trial Judge held that it was incombent upon the defendant company to satisfy him that they had taken such care of those goods as a man of ordinary prudence would take of his own goods.

Held, that that was not a correct statement of the law (7.8).

It is true that, under S. 106 of the Evidence Act, "when any fact is especially within the knowledge of any person, the burden of proving that fact is on him"; and it was therefore right that the defendant company should call the material witnesses who were on the spot. But this provision of the law of evidence does not discharge the plaintiffs from proving the want of due diligence, or (expressing it otherwise) the negligence, of the servants of the defendant company (8).

It may be for the company to lay the materials before the Court; but it remains for the plaintiffs to satisfy the Court that the true inference from those materials is that the servants of the defendant company have not shown due care, skill, and nerve (8), (Sir Walter Phillimere.) "Teesta" at Cuddalore and Pondicherry for Penang under two bills of lading. By each of the bills of lading the goods were expressed to be shipped for carriage to Penang and to be delivered at the Port of Penang and each contained the following clause:—

"The company is to have the option of delivering these goods or any part thereof into receiving ship or landing them at the risk and expense of the shipper or consignee as per scale of charges to be seen at the Agent's Office, and is also to be at liberty until delivery to store the goods or any part thereof, in receiving ship, godown, or upon any wharf the usual charges thereof being payable by the shipper or consignee. The company shall have a lien upon all or any part of the goods against expense incurred on the whole or any part of the shipment. In all cases and under all circumstances the liability of the company shall absolutely cease when the goods are free of the ship's tackle, and thereupon the goods shall be at the risk for all purposes and in every respect of the shipper or consignee."

The Shippers drew hills against the goods on S. F. & Cr. of Penang in favour of the appellants to whom the hills of lading were handed as security. The hills on S. F. & Cr. were accepted and were held with the bills of lading by the

by S. F. & Co.

The "Teesta" had arrived at Penang on 10-8-1905, and on her arrival, the cargo intended for Penang was delivered overside into lighters and taken to the wharf. The practice for the owners of steamers calling at Penang was to appoint landing agents at that port. The business of the landing agents was to send lighters to meet an incoming vessel belonging to their employers on being furnished with a ropy of the ship's manifest. The goods were discharged from the ship's tackle into the lighters. The landing agents gave the master a clean receipt, if they were received in good order. The goods were then carried to jetty shed, held under lease from Government, landed there, and assorted by the landing agents ready for delivery to the consignees; on production of the bill of lading endorsed by the ship's agents with a delivery order. If the consignees applied for their goods within 96 hours they got them free of store rent; if not, the goods were either kept in the jetty sheds or removed to godowns. The landing agents made out their account of the landing charges and storage rent, if any, according to a scale of charges exhibited in the offices of the ship's agents. They received payment direct from the consignees. The endorsement of the hill of lading was required as a release of the ship's lien for freight and expenses incurred on the shipment. Without such endorsement the landing agents were not at liberty to deliver goods to con-

On 6-9-1905 upon the dishonour by S. F. & Co. of the bills accepted by them, the appellants produced the bills of lading, with delivery order endorsed, and claimed the goods from Bob & Co., the landing agents of the respondent company. The goods were not forthcoming, having already been taken away without the production of a bill of lading or a delivery order by the representative of S.F. & Co., acting in collusion with the representative of Bob & Co. and been disposed of, in fraud of the persons entitled.

In a suit brought by the appellants against the respondent Company for damages for non-delivery or conversion of the suid goods, held, affirming the Court below, that the clause providing for cesser of liability applied to the case and that it afforded complete protection to the respondent Company.

Simble the landing agents at Penang were in the position of intermediaries owing duties to both parties agent for the shipowners as long as the contract of affreightment remained unexhausted, and agents for the consignees as soon as the bill of lading was produced with delivery order endorsed. DELAY IN LOADING—CLAIM TO DEMURRAGE IN CASE OF.

Accord and satisfaction of —What amounts to.

The plaintiffs as owners chartered to the defendant company the steamship B to load at Calcutta a full and complete cargo of coal for carriage to Colombo. The plaintiffs sued the charterers claiming demurrage under the charter party for delay in loading beyond the lay days provided. The defendants pleaded that there had been an accord and satisfaction, the plaintiffs having accepted the sum of Rs. 2076-3.0 in full discharge of their claim. The amount claimed by the plaintiffs was Rs. 44,400 odd.

The facts bearing upon that point appeared from a few documents. There was no oral evidence on the point. The focuments relied upon did not disclose any intention to give up such a large claim. What appeared was that there was no question about the liability of the charterers to the extent of the sum actually paid, and, therefore, the sum of farther amount for subsequent arrangement. The cargo was, no doubt, released without full payment being exacted. In these was no cesser clause in the charterparty, and the solventy of the defendance of the charterparty, and the solvency of the defendants was unquestionable.

Held reversing the appellate Court, and restoring the trial judge, that the onus was on the defendants to prove the accord, and that they failed to do so (239-40). (Lord Phillimore.) HOGARTH v. CORY BROS. & CO.

The appellants were respectively the registered owner and captain of a steamship. By a charter dated 20-8-1898, and entered into by the agents of the owners and some Bombay merchants, the owners agreed to let and the charterers agreed to hire the ship for 6 calendar months. She was placed at their disposal with a full complement of officers and men at Bombay for employment in the Indian Ocean and other Eastern waters as the charterers or their agents should direct, on certain conditions of which the following were important:-(2) The owners were to pay the captain and crew (4). The charterers were to pay freight monthly in advance at a rate, which came to Rs 18,000 (8). In default of such payment the owners were entitled to withdraw the steamer from the service of the charterers without prepalice to any claim the owners might otherwise have against them (14). The captain, although appointed by the owners, was to be under the orders and directions of the charterers as regards employment, agency, or other arrangements, Bills of lading were to be signed at any rate of freight the charterers or their agents might direct without prejudice to that charter, and the captain was to attend daily, if required at their offices to do so. The charterers were to indemnify the owners from all consequences or habilities that might arise from the captain doing so except for short delivery (21). The charterers were to have the option of subletting the steamer. (22) The owners were to have a lien upon all cargoes for freight or charter money due under the charter, and the charterers were to have a lien on the ship for all meneys paid in advance and not

Shortly after the time charter was made the ship was subchartered to the respondent for a round voyage from Saigon to Reunion and back from Mauritius to Bombay. She was to take rice from Saigon to Reunion and sugar from Mauritius to Bombay. Freight was to be payable for the whole voyage at a rate calculated only on the cargo, shipped from Saigon to Reunion. There was to be no freight payable by the sub-charterer (the respondent) to the time-charterer (the charterers under the time-charter) for any other cargo. On account of the freight thus estimated, Rs. 37,500 were to be paid at Bombay before the steamer sailed from Saigon, Rs. 25,000 at Reunion or Mauritius, and the balance was to be paid at Bombay after delivery of the cargo there.

The steamer completed that voyage and on 2-2-1899, sae arrived at Bombay, having on board a quantity of sugar put on board by the sub-charterer at Maritius, and for which he had received bills of lading from the captain. The freight payable by those bills of lading was prepaid by the sub-charterer, in Mauritius, so that when the ship arrived in Bombay nothing remained to be paid by the sub-charterer to the owners in respect of the bill of lading freight. Something was, however, due from the sub-charterer to the time charterers for money payable under the sub-charter. There was also due to the owners a month's freight from the time-charterers under the time charter, and the owners claimed a lien for that amount on the sub-charterer's sugar. And the question for decision was whether the ship owners were entitled to such a lien. The sub-charterer knew, in a general way, of the time charter, and that the freight payable under it by the time-charterers was Rs. 18,000, payable monthly in advance.

Held, that the shipowners were not entitled to the lien

any lien which the charterers had on the goods of the plain-

Apart from the bills of lading there was no contract between the shipowners and the sub-charterer. But he shipped sugar on board the steamer on the terms of those bills of lading, and the captain was authorised by the charter-party to sign them. Whether he signed them for the shipowners or for the sub-charterer he had express authority from the ship-owners to sign them. Hence the ship-owners contracted with the sub-charterer that his sugar should be carried to Bombay in that ship on the terms of the bills of lading.

The bills of lading in this case are not mere receipts for goods given to a charterer already bound to the shipowner by a charter-party entered into between them and which the captain had no authority to depart from.

Unless, therefore, the fact that the sub-charterer had notice of the charter-party makes a difference, the bills of lading entitled him to have his goods delivered to him on payment of the bills of lading freight. Notice by shipper of a charter-party has not the effect of incorporating into the bill of lading any terms which are inconsistent with it and which the captain was not bound to embody in the bill of lading. If the charter-party shows that the captain exceeded his authority in signing the bill of lading, and the shipper knew this, he cannot enforce the terms of the bill of lading uncontrolled by the charter-party. If the shipper knew that there was a charter-party, and had an opportunity of reading it, and did not trouble himself about it, he might be treated as knowing its contents. In the present case the charterers had authority to let other persons have the use of the ship for 6 months for any voyage in the waters mentioned in the charter-party. The captain was not only empowered to sign but was bound to sign bills of lading at any rate of freight which the charterers or their agents might direct, but " without prejudice " to that charter. These words only mean that the rights of the ship-owners against the charterers, and vice versa, are to be preserved. The condition in the charter-party empowering the owners to withdraw the ship, cannot mean that, after the captain has shipped goods for Bombay and given bills of lading for them to persons other than the charterers the owners can refuse to allow the ship to go to Bombay and deliver the goods there as agreed by the bills of lading. So as regards the condition giving a lien on all cargoes for freight or charter money due under that charter. This is a stipulation binding on the charterer, and gives the ship-owner a more extensive lien than he would have for freight payable in advance. But this clause does not override or limit the power of the captain to issue bills of lading at different rates of freight, or entitle the shipowners to a lien on the goods of persons who have come under no contract with them conferring a lien for the freight payable under the charter-party. A right to seize one person's goods for another person's debt must be clearly and distinctly conferred before a Court of Justice can be expected to recognise it.

Quarre whether if the bills of lading were mere receipts for goods put on board, the sub-charterer could have had any greater rights than those which the charterers had themselves. (Lord Lindley.) TURNER r. HAJI GOOLAN (1904) 31 I. A. 222= MAHOMAD AZAM.

by-Circular order of Company that goods will not be delivered except on production of document-Object of.

The respondents in the case were the Irrawaddy Flotilia company. The appellants (plaintiffs in the suit) were money-lenders. The appellants had advanced money to Chowdry, 1st defendant in the suit, under an agreement by which the money was to be employed in purchasing paddy to be stored in the appellant's godowns at a place called D, and thence to be taken to Rangoon for sale. In such case it was stipulated by the agreement that a receipt should be given to the plaintiffs for what should be taken, and that on the arrival of it at Rangoon money for it should be paid to the plaintiffs and then the receipt should be delivered up to the 1st defendant.

The 1st defendant's agent at D induced the appellants' agent to allow the paddy to be shipped to Rangoon in boats belonging to the respondents in the name of the 1st defendant as shipper. Eleven boot-loads in all were sent in respect of eight of which the 1st defendant paid the money to the plaintiff's nominee at Rangoon. In respect of the cargo of the last three boats the agent of the 1st defendant endorsed and delivered to the plaintiffs documents which accompanied the transmission of the goods and which were denominated " Mate's receipts." The 1st defendant sold the cargoes, obtained delivery of the posledy from the respondents without producing the documents called " Mate's receipts," and delivered the paskly to the purchasers, paying nothing to the plaintiffs.

The appellants thereupon instituted the suit out of which the appeal arose against the 1st defendant and the respondents, as 2nd defendant, for the recovery of the amount due for advances from the 1st defendant, and for the recovery of the said amount as damages from the respondents.

It was found that the document called a "Mate's Receipt" was a simple ordinary receipt for goods, that it was not a a document of title, and that an assignee by mere transfer of that document acquired no right as against the shipowner. The appellants contended that the respondents were nevertheless charged with a duty and came under an obligation to deliver to no one except upon the Mate's receipt. The argument was founded upon the circular, dated 1st January 1907, which was a sample of what was usually issued in the course of the respondent's business. The clause upon which they relied was as follows :- "Mate's receipts must, however, be given up before discharge is allowed to commence, or in the event of Mate's receipts not having come to hand, the company's usual guarantee must be signed."

Held, that the clause in the circular merely set forth a mode in which in conducting their own business, the respondent company would protect themselves in the course of their trade, and that it could not be founded upon by other Parties as forming any part of an obligation to them restrictive of their freedom or methods of action in conducting their own affairs (680).

An against customers the clause afforded protection to the respondent company, and it gave an intimation or waralong that they shall not part with the goods unless Mate's receipts are given up, or otherwise unless a guarantee be obtained. But this protection of themselves they could freely an arrange of the freely give up if satisfied of the identity and solvency of the owner or nominee of the owner who demanded the goods at the port of delivery. And it is wholly just tertii for any per-son in the position of the appellants to plead that that clause of the abipowner's cricular constitutes an obligation spon which at which they as outside parties are entitled to found in Council, 7th January, 1807.

-Document of title if and when a-Assignment by transfer of.

A document which accompanied a shipment of goods was beaded as follows .- " Irrawaddy Fletilla Company, Limited" (the Shipping Company). It was denominated plainly in the document as a " Mate's receipt." The document then proceeded in these terms :- "Received from O. Rahman " (the shipper) " the undermentioned quantity of paddy to be forwarded per cargo boat 128 in tow of steamer" and then the denomination was given, and then followed the expression " with liberty to tranship to other vessel. Number of baskets 5,000-five thousand baskets paddy, more or less," That document was signed " Alex. Wingate, Agent." He was, in point of fact, the ship's agent acting at the place for the shipping company. The document also said :- "N. R. All risk of navigation, loading and unloading goods, destruction, or damage by fire, robbery, weather, wreck of boat, separation of flat from steamer, or any other cause of whatever nature or kind soever to be home by the shipper, Freight payable before delivery.

On a question arising under what legal category the above document fell, held that the document was not a bill of lading, not a Mate's receipt, and not a negotiable instrument in the sense of S. 137 of the Transfer of Property Act, but that it was a simple ordinary receipt for goods (687.9),

It is a document which charges the Shipping Company with receipt of certain goods from the shipper, under a bargain to convey them by ship to Rangoon for stipulated freight and on certain conditions, and the duty arising from it was to deliver the goods to the shipper or to his nominee at Rangoon (679). It was not a document of title. There was no authority by law to give to an assignee by transfer of that document any right as against the shipowner except upon the usual form of an assignment as between the shipper and his assignee. That usual form must be accompanied by notice to the ship-owner which charges him with the fact of the assignment and makes him responsible to the assignee instead of to the orginal shipper (678-9). Assuming the "Mate's receipt," as it is called, to have been lost, was the owner of the goods, who then handed them to the shipowner, not to be entitled, because the receipt had disappeared, to the possession of his own goods from the car-rier whose freight he was willing to pay? That simple statement of the point shews that there is no legal foundation for the position that that was a document of title, and that the goods passed upon the transfer of it (679). (Lord Shate.) There is nothing to suggest that the original grant contained words sometimes employed in Indian documents, where it is the intention that the main grant of a village should create such an interest in land as would vest the minerals in the grantce, Nor does the language suggest that any further benefit to the grantce was contemplated or intended than such as might be derived from the ordinary use of the land for the purposes of cultivation (65). Decision as to-Basis of - Points to b considered. On an application by the Assignee in hankruptcy to set aside a transfer by the insolvent on the ground that it was a fraudulent preference within the meaning of S. 51 (1) of the Singapore Bankruptcy Ordinance, the question to be determined is one of fact, was the dominant motive actualing the debtor in making the transfer a desire to prefer the particular creditor or was it of a different character? As the solution of the question involves an enquiry into the state of a man's mind, and it must very seldom be the case that there is direct evidence on the point, the decision generally depends upon the inference properly to be drawn from the circumstances attending the transfer as established by the evidence. Whether a transfer made by an insolvent is to be deemed fraudulent and void as against the official Assignee in the bankruptcy within the meaning of S. 51 (1) of the Singapore Bankruptcy Ordinance depends upon the answer to the question whether the transfer was made "with a view of giving the transferee a preference over the other creditors." -Construction of - Rules applicable to - English technical rules-fustice, equity, and good conscience.

The construction and effect of the will must depend upon the law of the domicil, if that can be ascertained. At the time of the testator's death, there was no lex loci of the province in which he was comiciled, and the law applicable to the succession of any individual depended on his personal status, which again mainly depended on his religion.

Thus the succession of a Hindu would, as a general rule, fall to be regulated by Hinou law, and of a Mahomedan by Mahonedan law, and of an East Indian Christian by English Low; but in every case, for the purpose of determining the status personalis, regard was to be had to the mode of life and habits of the individual, and to the usages of the class or family to which he belonged.

If no specific rule could be ascertained to be applicable to the case, then the Judges administering justice in the province were to act "according to justice, equity, and good conscience. Such is the substance of the Regulations, as explained in the case of Abraham v. Abraham, which were made by the East India company for defining the jurisdiction of the Courts of the North-West Provinces of India in which the testator was domiciled, and which were in force at the time of his decease (1841). (Lord Westbury.) (1870) 13 M.I.A. 277 (307-8)= BARLOW & ORDE.

There is nothing to indicate the religious belief or profession of the testator or of his family or what were their habits or usages. His origin is unknown; it is stated, and there is proof, that he was illegitimate, being probably the child of a native woman by an European father; being illegitimate, he belonged to no family, and all that can be collected is that he was probably a soldier of fortune, who rose by his courage and military skill to a certain rank and distinction in the service of the East India Company. It is impossible, under these circumstances, to affirm that any particular law is applicable to the construction of the testator's will or the regulation of his succession. Any questions that may arise respecting them must, therefore, be determined by the principles of natural justice (309). (Lord Westbury.) BARLOW v. ORDE.

From the case of Barlow v. Orde (13 M. I. -Scope and effect of.

Ss. 2 and 3 of Act V of 1843 point to the conclusion that it was the general intention of the Legislature in passing that Act to relieve all persons then subject thereto from all the disabilities arising out of the status of slavery (142).

The general scope and object of the statute was to remove all the disabilities arising out of status of the slavery. The rule of Willa whereby the natural heirs of the emancipated were excluded by the heirs of the emancipator of the emancipated was not less such a disability, than the rule of law whereby the natural heirs of an unemancipated slave were excluded by his master or his heirs (144). A, one of the two wives of the last recognised Nawab of Surat, died in 1857. He had a daughter, B, born some four years before the marriage of A with the Nawab. B had been married in her father's lifetime to J, and the respondents, daughters, were the issue of that marriage. The question for decision was who was entitled to succeed to A, the respondents, or, the plaintiff, a distant relative of the Nawab.

A was originally a Rajput girl who had been converted to Mahomedanism; she was brought into the Zenana of the Nawab as his purchased slave, and was the mother, while still a slave, of B to him. She had been emancipated by him on the day previous to the celebration of the nikah marriage, by which she became his wife.

Plaintiff's case was that, according to the law of Willa.

Held that, by Act V of 1843, which was in force at the time of the death of A, the right, if any, of the Nawab's heirs under the law of Willa was taken away, and that the respondents were entitled to succeed to their grandmother (142-3).

The Act was in force at the time of the death of A: and the question who is entitled to succeed to her property is determinable by the law as it stood when the succession opened. Their Lordships cannot recognise any vested interest said to have been acquired previous to the passing of the Act by the unascertained persons who might at her death be thethen residuary heirs of her husband; or admit that her husband, by the act of emancipation, acquired a vested right which the statute could not except by express and retrospective words take away. S. 3-" that the person from whom the property may be derived was a slave "-Meaning.

The words "that the person from whom the property may be derived was a slave" in S. 3 of Act V of 1843 may well be taken to apply to any person who had at any time been a slave. The words are not "was a slave at the time of his or her death." (144). (Sir James W. Colvile.)

-S. 3-" Who may have acquired property by inderi tance"-Meaning.

It was contended that the words " who may have acquired property by inheritance" in S. 3 of Act V of 1843 are to be construed by the Mahomedan Law, which gives the property to a preferable class of heirs, we, the heirs of the husband, the emancipator. This argument reduces the clause to a nullity. Their Lordships conceive that the words must be taken to include any persons who would have acquired a title to property by right of inheritance, but for some obstacle arising out of the status of slavery. Two rival interpretations of the proviso to S. 2 of the Sonthal Parganas Act XXXVII of 1855 naturally suggest themselves. The one is that the officers exercising the jurisdiction shall do so in accordance with the general laws and regulations, so that the rights of the parties are unaffected by the provision, although they are to be pronounced upon by a different judicial tribunal. The other is that not only the laws that govern rights, but also the procedure to enforce those rights, shall remain unchanged. Now it must be observed that this is a proviso and not an exception, and accordingly, taken in connection with the general language of the previous portions of the clause the former of these two interpretations is the one that commends itself to their Lordships, so that it must be construed as providing that the special officer or officers shall try such suits, but that is, trying and determining them they shall observe the general have and regulations obtaining in Bengal, which but for the Act would have applied equally in the Sonthal Parganas (206). ## SONTHAL PARGANAS PERMANENT SETTLE-MENT REGULATION III OF 1872 (BENGAL).

-Property situate partly in Southal Parganas-Suit in respect of -British Indian Courts - Jurisdiction - Abandomment of claim with respect to portion in the Parganas

The suit related to the succession to an impartible estate, called the Lachmipur Raj. The estate was situated in N. W. Bengal in the district of Bhagalpur, part of it extending into the Sonthal Parganas. The High Court held that by reason of Kegulation 3 of 1872, relating to those Parganas, the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Bhagalpur had no jurisdiction to try it, even though the plaintiffs abandoned that part of their claim which related to the postion in the Southol Parganas.

It seemed, however, to their Lordships not so plain, on first impression, that that decision was correct. (Loral Phillimore). SAHDEO NARAIN DEO P. KUSUM KUMARI.

The appeal assee out of a suit instituted in 1904 in the Court of the Subordinate Judge at Bhagalpur in Bengal to enforce a mortgage bond of the year 1896. By far the greater portion of the mortgaged properties was situated in the district of the Southal Parganas, and the mortgagors resided in that district. The remainder of the mortgaged property was situated within the local jurisdiction of the Bhagalpur Court. The bond in suit was executed at Bhagalper and contained a stipulation that the mortgagers might enforce it in the Bhagalpur Court. Although portions of the lands mortgaged had been settled, and notification had been duly made that such settlement had been completed, at dates prior to the institution of the suit, other portions were not so settled. The suit bond provided for compound interest and the amount claimed in the suit for interest exceeded the amount of the principal advanced Held (1) that the Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit; (2) that the stipulation in the mortgage bond that the mortgagees might enforce it in the Court of Phagalpur could not give it the necessary jurisdiction: and (3) that, apart from the question of jurisdiction, any Court dealing with the subject-matter of the suit would be bound to give full force and effect to the provisions of S. 6 of the Sonthal Parganas Settlement Regulation, 1872, relating to usury, and therefore to refuse to decree any compound interest arising from any intermediate adjustment of interest, or an amount of total interest exceeding the principal of the original debt or loan, (215.6).

The suit came within the provisions of S. 5 of the Sonthal Parganas Setllement Regulation, 1872, relating to the exclusive jurisdiction of officers, appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, or by settlement officers, in as much as it related to land which had not been settled, or the settlement of which had not been declared by a notification in the Calcutta Gazette to have been completed and concluded (210).

The Bhagalpur Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, which, beyond question, was a suit in regard to land in the Sonthal Parganas and that being so the parties could not give it the necessary jurisdiction by consent. To do so would be to nullity the express prohibition of S 5 of the 16 Bcm. L. E. 105 = (1914) M. W. N. 105 = Sonthal Parganas Regulation 1872, which was binding on

SONTHAL PARGANAS SETTLEMENT EEGULA-TION III OF 1908.

S. 5-Effect-Mortgage of property situate partly in Bhagalpur and partly in Southal Parganas-Suit on, filed in 1915-Jurisdiction of Bhagalpur Court to entertain-S. b of Reg. 111 of 1872 as amended-Effect.

The effect of S. 5 of Regulation III of 1908, which replaced S. 5 of the Kegulation of 1872, has been to exclude for the future after that substitution the jurisdiction of the civil courts to try cases relating to any lands in the Sonthal Parganas only during such period as that land should be under settlement, the period being reckoned from the time when the land is notified as under settlement to the time when the settlement is completed (429),

In a suit brought in the court of the Salverdinate Judge of Bhagalpur to enforce a mortgage, it appeared that the mortgage was made in Bhagalpur, and that some part of the mortgaged property was within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Sub-Court of Bhagalpur, while the rest was in the Sonthal Parganas. Held, that the jurisdiction of the Court of the Sub-Judge of Bhagalpur to entertain the suit which was instituted on 5-2-1915 was not excluded by the substituted S. 5 of the Regulation of 1872

Held further, that in entertaining the suit the Sub-Judge of Bhagalpur was a court "having jurisdiction in the Sonthal Parganas" within the meaning of S. 6 of the Regulation III of 1872, as amended in 1893, and was bound to give full force and effect to the provisions of that section (429.30). #### SOVEREIGN.

-Absolute soccreign-Public and private property of Distinction.

In the course of the argument in this case Lord Tenterden asked, "what is the distinction between the public and private property of an absolute sovereign? You mean by public property, generally speaking, the property of the state but in the property of an absolute sovereign, who may dispose of every thing at any time, and in any way he pleases, is there any distinction?" and in delivering the judgment of their Lordships he also observed, "another point made is that the property was not proved to have been the public property of the Peishwa. Upon that point I have already intimated my opinion that when you are speaking of the property of an absolute sovereign there is no pretence for drawing a distinction, the whole of it belongs to him as sovereign, and he may dispose of it for his public or private purposes in whatever manner he may think proper". #### SPECIAL APPEALS ACT.

Act III of 1843.

-Admissibility of special appeal-Decision of single Judge as to-Finality given by Act to-Effect of-Prity Council appeal-Right of-Effect on.

By Act III of 1843, the decision of a single Judge of the Sudder Court of Bombay as to the admissibility of a special appeal was final so far as the Sudder Court was concerned; but the Act did not extend to take away the right of appeal to the Privy Council (455).

It is the prerogative of the Crown to do justice between all its subjects, and the Indian Legislature could have so power to limit or affect that prerogative without the sanction of the Crown, which does not appear to have been given. The finality created by the Act must be limited by the jurisdiction of the Legislative power which created it and their Lordships are, therefore, of opinion that the order of the single Judge has been properly made the subject of appeal to Her Majesty in Council (455). Upon the proceedings coming before the full Court of the Sudder Descenny Adapted that Court ordered the certificate to be further amended. After these proceedings had taken place, Act, No. XVI, of 1853, was passed, whereby the Act. No. III of 1843, relating to special appeals, was repealed. By section 3 of the Act No. XVI, of 1853, power was given to the Sudder Dewanny Adambut to determine appeals without reference to the points certified. Shortly after, I. died. After his death his widow executed a registered deed in favour of the appellant transferring to him another property of L for the sum of Rs. 15,000. The appellant accepted the said transfer as " in part satisfaction of " the debt in respect of which the document of 2.8-23 was given, and credited the said sum of Rs. 15,000 towards that debt.

Held that, in the view that the document of 2-8-1923 was a contract to grant an out-and-out transfer, liquidating the amount due in the sense of complete extinguishment of any existing debt, a decree for specific performance of the contract by conveyance of the property could not be granted.

Subsequent to the execution of the dacument of 2-8-1923 the appellant had accepted a property valued at Rs. 15,000 in part satisfaction of the obligation of 2-8-23 and in part payment of the sum due to him, and had in fact credited that part payment accordingly. To grant specific performance would accordingly be to vest the property fully in the -Specific performance of -Assignor's sunt for - Maintainability-Decree barred in interval.

The suit was brought to obtain a decree for specific per formance of an agreement by which the defendant had agreed to purchase from the executors of B a decree and all the rights appertaining thereto which the said executors had obtained on a nontgage. The decree agreed to be assigned to the defendant was a decree for sale of certain immoveable properties, which could also in certain events be executed against the person and other property of the defendant to the suit in which it was made. Owing to the bor of limitation the decree for sale became incapable of execution subsequent to the date of the agreement, and thereupon the defendant refused to pay the agreed price and to take an assignment of the decree; hence the suit for specific performance.

Held, reversing the Court below, that, as the plaintiffs were unable to perform their part of the agreement, they were not entitled to a decree for the specific performance of the agreement.

After the expiry of the time allowed by law for executing the decree for sale, the decree, as a decree capable of being executed, could not by reason of the bar or limitation be assigned to the defendant. It had become a dead decree. whereas the decree, whatever might be its value, which he had agreed to purchase, and which the executors had agreed, to assign to him, was a decree capable of execution. DAMAGES FOR BREACH OF CONTACT IN.

-Amendment of plaint to as to make suit one for-What amounts to.

A purchaser saed for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of immoveable property with claims for damages additional or alternative all in terms of S. 19 of the Specific Relief Act. During the pendency of the suit, the plaintiff amended his plaint, his object in doing so evidently being to convert the suit imo one for damages for breach of the contract simplicater. But the amended plaint retained the paragraph in the original plaint, which alleged that the plaintiff "is as he has been throughout ready and willing to perform his said contract," and it also retained the claim for specific performance.

Held that the amendment, when properly construed, did not operate to convert the suit into one for the recovery of damages for breach of the contract simplicator. (Lord Mounday A.) ARDESHIR H. MAMA P. FLORA SASSOON.

S. 29 of the Specific Relief Act. which makes the dismissal of a suit for specific performance of a contract a bur to a right to sur for compensation for breach, implies that, prior to such discussal, the right is not larred. A suit for specific performance of a contract with claims for damages additional or alternative all in 'erms of S. 19 of the Act may, therefore, in a proper case, he allowed to be amended at its hearing into one for damages simpliciter. The power to allow such an amendment is, however, one to be most carefully and jealously exercised in all the circumstances of each individual case and with due regard to its effect upon the position both of the plaintiff and the defendant. Indeed so serious in many cases is the exercise of this power that it would be a wise precaution for a Judge before allowing any such amendment in a contested case to require the plaint to be actually re-modelled in a form appropriate to an action seeking compensation for breach of contract and nothing else. In a purchaser's suit for specific performance with an alternative claim for damages consitioned just as it is conditioned in S. 19 of the Specific Relief A.t, the plaintiff, nine mouths or more before the trial, wrote a letter formally notifying the defendant to the effect that he had decided to abandon his claim for specific performance, and that he would, instead, at the trial claim damages against the defendant for her breach of contract.

Held, that there was after that letter no power left in the Trial Judge without an apt and sufficient amendment of the plaint, to award the plaintiff at the hearing any relief at all, and that he had no power to award damages. (Lord Blanesburgh.) ARDESHIR H. MAMA P. FLORA SASSOON.

DECREE IN-DISCRETION OF COURT.

-Bargain oncrous, but not unconscromable.

It has been strongly urged on behalf of the defendant that, as a decree for specific performance is discretionary, their Lordships, having regard to the onerous character of the bargain, should not affirm the decision of the Chief Court decreeing the suit. In the absence of any evidence of fraud or misrepresentation on the part of the plaintiff which induced the defendant to enter into the contract, their Lordships see no reason to accede to the argument. The bargain is onerous, but there is nothing to show that it is unconscionable (168-9). (Mr. Ameer Ali.) DAVIS v. MAUNG SHWE GO.

DECREE IN-PLAINTIFF'S RIGHT TO.

Breach by him of one of terms of contract-Defendant accepting benefit of agreement in part-Effect.

A suit which appellant had instituted against Robert Watson & Co. was compromised on certain terms which related to the subject-matter of the suit and also on condition of his granting a lease of land not comprised in the same in favour of the said company. A pesition of compromise based upon the agreement was filed by the appellant, judgment was given in terms of the compromise, and a decree was drawn up in pursuance of the judgment. In a suit subsequently instituted by the successors in interest of Robert Watson & Co. against the appellant for specific performance of the agreement to lease referred to above, appellant contended that the plaintiffs were not entitled to specific performance because Robert Watson & Co. had violated a term of the compromise. Held that, if the term affected the contract, it must affect it in toto and it was impossible for the appellant, having accepted and received the advantage of the compromise so far as it related to the lands in the prior suit, afterwards to resist its effect upon the other portion of the lands to which it related. -Effect of.

It certainly is rather startling to be told that nine years after a contract has been made, which could have been satisfied within twelve months of its execution, a party to the contract is at liberty to take proceedings for specific performance. The rights of equity which prevail in British Barma are rights which are given to people who are vigilant and not to those who sleep and, unless there can be clearly established some reason which threw upon the defendant the entire blame for the delay that had occurred or unless indeed it can be shown that the real right of action had only accrued a short time before the proceedings were instituted, such a lapse of time would be fatal to any action for specific performance of a contract (219). -Plea of -Maintainability.

In a suit by the appellant for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land as varied by subsequent agreement, the main defence of the respondents in the courts below and before the Privy Council was that the suit was premature. Before the Privy Council they raised an alternative plea that the appellant had lost his right to specific performance by his delay.

There was no suggestion that the position of the purchaser had been so prejudiced by the appellant's delay in seeking specific performance that it would be inequitable to enforce it. It also appeared that all the delay, such as it was could not be ascribed to the laches of the appellant, and that the purchaser was professing willingness to complete only a few days before the commencement of the suit.

Held, under the circumstances, that the alternative plea was curious, and that there was in any event no substance in it. (Sir George Lounder.) RUSTOMJI ARDESHIR COOPER (1930) 32 Bom. L. R. 798= v. With regard to the necessity of proving the terms of a contract specific performance of which is sought, there is a distinction between cases where possession has been taken under the contract, and there is an uncertainty about its terms, and those where the possession was originally taken adversely. In the former case, the court will go to a great extent in order to do justice between the parties. The presumptive reversioners of a deceased Hindu sued for a declaration that a deed of gift executed by his widows in favour of his daughter did not affect their reversionary interest, and that part of the properties conveyed by the deed, which the widows claimed to be their own, were really part and parcel of the estate of the deceased. The widows and the daughter contended that the deed of gift vested the estate at once in the daughter absolutely, and that the properties purchased by the widows were their own and were not part of their husband's estate.

The first court, after taking the whole evidence adduced by both parties and thoroughly investigating the law and the facts of the case, held with the plaintiffs and decreed the suit. The High Court reversed the decree below and dismissed the suit, mainly on the ground that the case involved intricate questions of law, that, as the plaintiffs might not survive the widows and the estate might never vest in them, the suit ought not to be allowed to be protracted and a great additional expense to the allowed to be incurred, and that the decision might be postponed till there was some one before the court entitled to immediate Held, reversing the High Coart, that objections resting on the difficulties of the dispute were of much more weight in a preliminary stage than in a court of appeal, and that, as the defendants had not in the first instance objected to declaratory relief and taken the opinion of the first court upon that point, but had disputed the whole case of the plaintiffs, and as all the issues of fact and of law had been decided by the first Court in the plaintiff's favour, it was too late for the appellate court to reverse the decree below on the ground of discretion and in order to save further litigation and expense (157). Both under the 15 & 16 Vict., c. 86, S. 50, and under S. 15 of C. P. C. of 1859, a declaratory decree cannot be made unless plaintiff would be entitled to consequential rebef if be asked for it (161). (Sir Barnes Powers, SREE NARAIN MITTER D. A declaratory decree ought not to be made under S. 15 of C. P. C. of 1859 unless there is a right to some consequential relief which, if asked for, might have been given by the court, or unless in certain cases a declaration of right is required as a step to relief in some other court (III). A Hindu widow sued the defendant for himself and as guardian of his minor son to set aside two deeds, by one of which the defendant agreed to give the said minor to her for adoption in the Dattaka form, and by the other of which she agreed to take the said child into adoption. The plaintiff's case was that, notwithstanding the deeds, the defendant refused to give the child, and that, therefore, the form of adoption had not been complied with. The minor was not a party to the suit. The cause of action for the suit was stated to be the defendant's refusal to execute an ikramamah in cancellation of the said deeds.

Hild, reversing the courts below, that the suit as framed was not maintainable (161).

The suit is merely to set aside the deeds, and does not pray either for setting aside the adoption, or for a declaration that there was no valid adoption. The deeds were not actually necessary to render the adoption valid, and, even if they be set aside, the adoption may be proved adiumde (159). If the deeds are mere agreements between the plaintiff and the father of the child, the breach by the defendant of his agreement to give would not render the deeds null and void and entitle the plaintiff to maintain the wit. If, on the other hand, the deeds are deeds of gift and adoption, the suit is not maintainable, because there is no consequential relief to which the plaintiff would be entitled against the defendant if the deeds be declared void (161). -Rule-Exception.

S. 15 of C. P. C. of 1859 does not confer any right to declaratory relief in any given case, but merely enacts that no suit shall be liable to objection on the ground that a merely declaratory decree is sought, and that it shall be lawful for the Civil Courts to make binding declarations of right without granting consequential relief (155).

The apparently wide door here opened for declaratory suits is greatly narrowed by the decision that, as a general rule, the Court shall not make a declaration except in cases in which she plaintiff could if he chose seek some consequential relief. That doctrine is, however, subject to exceptions (150). (Sir Arthur Hobboute.) ISRI DUT KOER P. MUSSIMUT HANSBUTH KOERAIN.

R died about 1837, leaving a son, S, and a widow the 1st respondent. S died subsequent to June 1864, having, as alleged by the appellant, the widow of S, made a provision for life for the maintenance of the 1st respondent.

On 14—12—1883, the 1st respondent executed a document whereby she recited that she had adopted the 2nd respondent and bequeathed to him all her estate, moveable and immoveable. The appellant shortly afterwards instituted the suit-out-of-which the appeal arose to have it declared that that adoption and alienation were invalid. The Court below (the Judicial Commissioner, thought that the case was not one in which, in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion, it ought to grant a d-claratory decree, or that a declaratory decree ought to have been granted by the Court of first instance, and it therefore reversed the decision of that Court and refused a declaratory decree.

Held that the Judicial Commissioner exercised a very sound judgment in what he did.

All that is suggested in support of a declaratory decree is this: that at some time or other after the death of the present plaintiff, the person who according to the plaintiff's contention is not an adopted son may by some means, either by an act of the Government or otherwise, obtain possession as an adopted son. The only object therefore of having a declaratory decree is to prevent him being put into possession. Their Lordships cannot assume that the Government, if petitioned to put the person claiming to be an adopted son into possession would do so unless they saw that he had a right to that possession. The officers of Government would in ordinary course, if there were any doubts as to the title, refer the parties to the Civil Court. If the person claiming to have been adopted brings an action to enforce his title, the question will be investigated whether he was validly adopted or not. (Sir Barnes Peacock.) Their Lordships are always slow to reverse the decisions of Courts below made in the deliberate exercise of a discretion entrusted to them by law.

In a case in which the Courts below had granted a declaration to a contingent reversioner that a will by a Hindu widow purporting to transfer to a stranger the estate of her husband was invalid for that purpose, ther Lordships, though of opinion that if they had been sitting as a Court of first instance they would have felt no little hesitation before making the decree that had been made, refused to

- Object indirect of avoiding appropriate proceedings-Declaration sought with.

When the real object of a suit brought by a Zemindar against a great number of his ryots to set aside, not any act but a mere allegation of the defendants that they had a certain tenure appeared to be to obtain a general declaration against a great number of persons holding by different rights that they had not bromultur tenure, of which declaration the Zemindar might avail himself in proceedings to be taken in the Revenue Court in suits for the enhancement of rent, held that, even if no rule of law had barred the suit, the case was not one in which, in the proper exercise of judicial discretion, a declaration of title should have been made (85).

The Zemindar may institute any action he may think fit in the Revenue Court for the purpose of enhancement of rent against all or any of these his tenants; but each of these cases must be tried upon its merits, and ought not to be prejudiced by a declaration such as he has sought to obtain (85-6). Persons recognised by law as suitors to such relief-Refusal to exercise discretion in favour of Grounds.

In a suit for a mere declaration, there is no doubt, discretion in the Court, which may find it inexpedient to grant the relief asked. It is not a matter of absolute right to obtain a declaratory decree. It is discretionary with the Court to grant it or (Sir James W. Colvile.) KATHAMA NATCHIAR v. GRANT OF -MOFUSIL COURTS IN INDIA.

Perser of before and after C. P. C. of 1859.

It was suggested that the power to make a merely declaratory decree was possessed by the courts in the Mofussil before the C. P. C. of 1859 was passed, and had not been taken away thereby. No authority which establishes the first of those propositions was cited; and their Lordships conceive that if the Legislature had intended to continue to those Courts the general power of making declarators (if they ever possessed such a power), it would not have introduced this clause (S. 15) into the C. P. C. of 1859, which, if a limited construction is to be put upon it, clearly implies that any decree made in excess of the power thereby conferred would be objectionable. Nor does any Court in India since the passing of the Code seem to have considered that it had the power of making declaratory decrees independently of that clause (179-80.) (Sir James W. Celvile.) GRANT OF -OBJECTION TO -TIME FOR TAKING-APPEAL.

Objection for first time in-Maintainability.

Objections to the grant of declaratory relief resting on the difficulties of the dispute are of much more weight in a preliminary stage than in a Court of Appeal. The defendant ought to object to declaratory relief in the Court of first instance and to take the opinion of the trial Court on the point. Where, however, he omits to do so, but disputes the whole case of the plaintiff and an important issue of fact, and two important issues of law, are decided by the first Court in plaintiff's favour, it comes very late for the Court of Appeal to reverse the action of the Court below on the ground of discretion and in order to save further litigation and expense (157). ——Injunction restraining opposite party from withdrawing amount realised in execution of award—Suit also for—Objection to maintainability of—Right of—Consent order—Appeal from—Consent to adjudication on merits by appellate Court—Effect.

The respondents were parties to a contract which provided that any dispute arising out of, or in any way relating to, the same, or to its construction or fulfilment, should be referred to arbitration " in accordance with the Rules and Bylaws endorsed on the contract," and that such Rules and By-laws should form part of the contract. They commenced an action against the appellants, the other party to the contract, in which they alleged (among other things) that the appointment by the appellants of one S to act as sole arbitrator was illegal, and that the awards made by S were void and inoperative and claimed a declaration to that effect. The awards had been filed under S. 11 of the Indian Arbitration Act, and in pursuance of S. 15 of that Act a warrant had been issued directing the Sheriff to levy the amounts awarded by seizure of the respondents' goods; and that had been done. By their plaint the respondents therefore also claimed an injunction restraining the appellants from withdrawing the sum in the Sheriff's hands and a declaration that the respondents were entitled to a refund of that sum. There was also a claim for damages which had not been proceeded with.

The High Court, on appeal, declared the awards void, and, with the consent of the parties, ordered the appellants (defendants) to repay to the respondents the amount realised by the Sheriff and paid over to the appellants upon an undertaking by the respondents to return the amount if the awards should be found valid by the Privy Council.

On appeal to the Privy Council by the appellants, they contended that the suit was open to objection under Ss. 42 and 56 of the Specific Relief Act, on the ground that no relief was asked other than a declaration.

Their Lordships overruled the plea observing as follows:-

The plaint asked not only for a declaration, but also for an injunction, repayment of the amount levied, and other relief. Further, it is difficult to see how any technical objection to the jurisdiction can now be maintained, having regard to the fact that the order appealed from was to some extent a consent order, and contemplated that the question of the validity of the awards should be finally determined by this Board. SPECIFIC RELIEF ACT (I OF 1877)-(Contd.)

S. 42—Cases under (or Declaratory Suit—Maintainability)—(Contd.)

DEED-DECLARATION OF INVALIDITY OF.

An Oudh talookdar sued for (1) possession of a village comprised in his taluq; (2) mesne profits; (3) (alternatively) a declaration that the defendant had no right in the suit village beyond that of a lessee having no right, and that he was liable to be ejected by an ordinary notice of ejectment; (4) further relief.

The defendant claimed a perpetual under-proprietary right in the village under a lease of 1865 granted by the plaintiff's grandfather to the defendant's father and confirmed in defendant's favour by the plaintiff as part of a compromise between the plaintiff and his grandfather.

Held that in substance the object of the suit was to get rid of the blot or cloud on the plaintiff's title occasioned by the defendant's claim under the deed of 1865, either by cancellation of the instrument or by a declaration that it was not the plaintiff's deed, and had not by any act of his become hinding upon him or his estate, or by a decision that according to its true construction it had no operation beyond the life of the grantor (plaintiff's grandfather) or alternatively of the grantee (defendant's father), and that the suit therefore came within S. 39 or S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act.

The suit can only be maintained (if at all) as one for those objects, notwithstanding that for obvious reasons it is in the plaint made to look as much like a suit for recovery of land as possible, and an order for ejectment in the Revenue Court might be consequential on a decree in the plaintiff's favour. No doubt, the ultimate object of the plaintiff was recovery of possession; but that relief could not be given in this suit. It is different, therefore, from a case in which the substantial relief sought is recovery of land and the setting aside an instrument is merely ancillary or incidental to that relief. In the present case the cancellation of the in-trument or a declaration of its invalidity as against the plaintiff was the substantial relief sought and the only relief which the Courts had jurisdiction to give. DEED—DECLARATION OF INVALIDITY OF—(Contd.) to succeed her after her death, by voiding the appellant's pretensions. The widow was sole plaintiff in the suit as originally framed.

On objection by the defendant, M was added as a coplaintiff.

The defendant, in the written statement filed by him before the joinder of M, had put forward a nuncupative will of the deceased husband of the widow-plaintiff by which he was made the proprietor of the estate. The defendant persisted in this claim after M had been added as a co-plaintiff and indeed to the end of the suit. The Sub-Judge decided the issue framed on the point against the defendant; and the defendant in his appeal to the High Court from the Sub-Judge's decision complained that his finding was not correct. The High Court also dealt with the question of the will in its final judgment.

On appeal to the Privy Council the appellant contended that the settlement proceedings could not afford the plaintiffs a cause of action to sustain the suit for a declaratory decree, that relief against the will was not one of the objects of the original suit, and that his putting forward of the will ought not to be regarded in considering whether the suit as framed was sustainable.

Semble the contention could not, in the circumstances of the case, he upheld (113).

When M was made a plaintiff, the sun might be considered as a new suit, and the appellant, having before that time put forward the claim under the will and persisted in it to the end, relief might, if asked for, have been granted against it. It was not necessary that the suit should have been in fact remodelled when he became plaintiff, so as to seek for this relief: it is sufficient if it neight have been so remodelled, and relief obtained (113). I, a Jain of the sub-division of the Saraogee-Agarvalas, died sonless. He had during his lifetime received from the Government a grant for his life of the Zemindary of mouzah N. After his death the Government offered to sell the mouzah to his widow, and she purchased it, the purchase-money being paid out of the proceeds of her deceased hasband's estate. Whilst making up the wajib-ul-arz, the attlement officer called upon the widow to name her successor to the mouzah, with a view to enter the name in the paper; and in answer to this requisition she requested that the name of M should be recorded as her adopted son and successor. The defendant-appellant objected to this being done, whereupon the settlement officer referred the widow to the civil Court.

The widow thereupon instituted a suit claiming to be maintained in possession by establishment of her exclusive right of inheritance to the estate of her husband, including Mouzah A', and to uphold the adoption of M, as well as his right permanently to succeed her after her death, by voiding the defendant's pretensions. M was also made a coplaintiff.

It was not shown that the entry on the wajib-ul-arz of the name of M, as the adopted son of the widow, was necessary to the settlement of the mouzah, or the completion of the title, or the right to present possession, because the mouzah had already been granted by the Government to the widow, and she had been recorded as proprietor. The object of the paper was merely to record peculiar customs and rights for the information of the settlement officers.

Nemble: notwith-tanding that the Deputy Collector asked for information as to the widow's successor and, upon the appellant's objection to the entry of the adoption, placed his objection upon the wajib-ul-arz, and referred the parties to a civil Court, the proceedings before the settlement officer were not such an obstruction to the title or right of possession as would sustain the declaratory decree sought for (112). On the death of an Oudh talookdar, R, one of his widows, succeeded to the talook in pursuance of a will of the deceased, a summary settlement was made with her and a sunnud granted to her purporting to confer an absolute estate upon her. R purported to make a gift of the estate to one B. The plaintiff, another widow of the deceased talookdar, thereupon instituted a suit for a declaration that she was entitled to succeed to the estate after the death of R, that K held only a life interest and was a trustee, notwithstanding anything contained in Act I of 1869, that the gift to B was invalid, and that she (plaintiff) was entitled as a reversioner entitled to succeed to the estate after the death of R.

It was not contested that by virtue of Act I of 1877, S, 42, such a suit was maintainable (44). (Sir Robert P. Collier.) THAKURAIN RAMANUND KOER T. THAKURAIN RAGUNATH KOER. (1882) 9 I. A. 41 = 8 C. 769 (775) = 11 C. L. R. 149 = 4 Sar. 316 = R. & J's. Nos. 67 & 68.

Interpretation true of Declaration of Suit for, and to have act done in contravention of statute prenounced void.

S. 42 of the Specific Relief Act is inapplicable to a suit which is in substance a suit to have the true construction of a statute declared, and to have an act done in contravention of the statute rightly understood pronounced void and of no effect. TRESPASSER—DECLARATION OF TITLE AND INJUNCTION AGAINST.

- Suit by person with only possessory title for-Maintainability of-Decree in-Form of.

The plaintiff claimed title to the suit property under a purchase by his vendor from the heist of one K. The defendant alleged that the suit property had been dedicated by K to religious and charitable purposes and was therefore inalienable, and that he (defendant) was the Mutawallee thereof. The suit was for a declaration that the plaintiff was the sole and absolute owner of the suit property, that it had not been dedicated for religious or charitable purposes, and that the defendant had no sort of right, title, or interest therein, and for an injunction and damages.

The High Court found in favour of the dedication set up and that the property was inalienable and that plaintiff acquired no title by his porchase. It also found that the defendant was not Mutawallee and had no sort of right to or interest in the property, that plaintiff had been in possession of the suit property for six years before suit, and that defendant's interference with plaintiff's possession was illegal and unlawful. Nevertheless, the High Court dismissed the plaintiff's suit.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the plaintiff was entitled to a declaration of his title to the property, but that the decree should merely declare him to be "lawfully entitled to possession" of the suit property (107).

There is a misapprehension by the High Court of the nature of the plaintiff's case upon the facts stated in their judgment. The possession of the plaintiff was sufficient evidence of title as owner against the defendant. By S. 9 of the Specific Relief Act, if the plaintiff had been dispossessed otherwise than in due course of law, he could, by a suit instituted within 6 months from the date of the dispossession, have recovered possession, notwithstanding any other title that might be set up in such suit. If he could thus recover possession from a person who might be able to prove a title, it is certainly right and just that he should be able, against a person who has no title and is a mere wrongdoer, to obtain a declaration of title as owner, and an injunction to restrain the wrong-doer from interfering with his possession. #### WILL Deceased—Will of Declaration of invalidity of Heir's suit for Will in writing Nuncupative will.

It would not probably be disputed that if a fictitious will in writing be set up, the heir, upon a proper case being made, might claim to have the document cancelled, and their Lordships are not prepared to say that in cases where property may legally pass by an oral will an analogous right to have it declared null may not exist. A claim under such a will is not a bare assertion of title, but the setting op a specific fact by which title to property may be conferred. The reasons, too, for giving such relief in the case of written wills would seem to apply to nuncapative wills, and one of them, the probable deaths of witnesses, with even greater force to the latter than the former (112.3). Plaintiff's right to complain of, himself being with-

Claiming to have been adopted by a deceased Zemindar, the plaintiff sued for the recovery of the zemindary from B, his surviving widow. The first Court found against the alleged adoption and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff preferred an appeal from its decree. Pending that appeal B died, and the respondent, who claimed to be the heir of the deceased zemindar as his son by a Gandharva marriage to another wife, was brought on record as her legal representative. In the meantime the Collectors of the District put the plaintiff into the exclusive possession of the whole of the zemindary, and he continued to be in such possession. The appellate Coart concurred with the court below in finding against the title of the plaintiff, found that the respondent was the person entitled to succeed to the zemindary, and in effect directed him to be put into possession of it.

Held that the portion of the appellate decree establishing the title of the re-pondent and directing him to be put into possession was wrong, and that the plaintiff was entitled to complain of it, notwith-tanding that his title had been found against.

The question of the title of the respondent was not the question in the cause. The plaintiff having acquired a possession of some sort by lawful authority by a grant by the Executive Government, he should have been allowed to retain that possession, and the respondent must be left to his own remedy. STAMP-(Contd.)

on April 1, 1857, to establish the mortgage. The question for decision was whether, if the petition was to be treated as creating the mortgage, it was properly stamped in accordance with the Indian statute then in force to entitle the plaintiffs to sue upon it.

The certified copy produced bore only a stamp of Re. 1, and the District Judge thought that, as the copy bore a stamp of Re. 1 only, the original deed of compromise must have borne a stamp of Re. 1, and held that, as the document was insufficiently stumped, its copy was not admissible in evidence. He was of opinion that if the original had borne a stamp of Rs 10 (which was the proper stamp), the stamp on the copy would also have been one of Rs. 10, as required by Act XX of Schedule A of the Regulation.

Held that, if the petition was to be treated as the document creating the mortgage, it might be rightly presumed that the officer before whom it was presented satisfied himself that it was properly stamped, and that the District Judge had clearly fallen into an error in taking the stamp on the certified copy as an indication of the stamp on the petition itself (268).

No inference can be derived from the fact that the copy bears a Re. I stamp. Under the Court-Fees Act of 1870 it is the proper stamp for issuing a copy of the proceeding in the Zillah Court; and as a copy of the petition and the order thereon, it bears the right Court-fee stamp of Re.1 (208). STAMP ACT I OF 1879.

Ss. 34 to 39-Applicability-Last deed unstamped-Applicability of penalty previsions to case of.

The provisions made by the Stamp Act I of 1879 for the case of deeds either unstamped or insufficiently stamped have no application when the original deed, which ought to have been stamped or was insufficiently stamped, has not been produced. Accordingly secondary evidence of the contents of the document is in such a case inadmissible.

The clauses of the Stamp Act throughout deal with and exclusively refer to the admission as evidence of original documents which, at the time of their execution, were not stamped at all or were insufficiently stamped. It is only upon production of the original writ that the Collector has the power given him, or the duty imposed upon him, of assessing and charging the penalty-a duty which he must in that case perform by writing an indorsement upon the writ submitted to him, which then, and not till then becomes probative in law. -Admission in evidence of-Operation of deed-Cutting down extent of, to the portion covered by the stamp in fact affixed-Permissibility.

The respondent, a younger son of a deceased Hindu, executed in favour of the appellant, his eldest brother, a deed of release thereby accepting some property for the maintenance of himself and his family and relinquishing all his right to any portion of the family property in fasour of the appellant. In a suit brought by the respondent, notwithstanding that deed of release, to recover his share of the family property from the appellant, the 1-tter pleaded the deed in bar to the suit. He tendered it in evidence and no objection was raised by the respondent to its being admitted in evidence. The first court admitted it in evidence, and, giving effect to it, dismissed the respondent's suit. The High Court on appeal found that the deed was not properly stamped, being stamped only with a stamp of two annas. It did not reject the deed on the ground that it was insufficiently stamped, nor did it require the deed to be properly stamped and the penalty to be paid. It, however, adopted the course of leaving the deed as part of the evidence in the case, just in the way in which it had been placed among the evidence by the court of first instance, but it qualified its effect, and the extent of its operation, by making it a deed of release, releasing so much of that which the respondent might otherwise claim as would be covered by the insufficient stamp of two annas-

Held that the course taken by the High Court was entirely nithout precedent, without principle, and without authority (39).

-Prior law-Alteration of-Intention as to-Mode of ascertaining.

The proper mode of dealing with an Act intended to codify a particular branch of the law is in the first instance to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning uninfluenced by any considerations derived from the previous state of the law and not to start with enquiring how the law previously stood, and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaltered. to see if the words of the enactment will bear an interpretation in conformity with this view. If a statute, intended to embody in a Code a particular branch of the law is to be treated in this fashion, its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frestrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that on any point specially dealt with by it, the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used instead of, as before, roaming over a vast number of authorities in order to discover what the law was, extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions. The question was whether the Contract Act of 1872 was intended to alter the law applicable to common carriers. At the time of the passing of the Act of 1872, there was in force a statute relating to common carriers (The Carriers Act of 1865), which, in connection with the common law of England, formed a Code at once simple, intelligible, and complete.

Held that, if it had been intended to codify the law of common carriers by the Act of 1872, the more usual course would have been to have repealed the Act of 1865 and to re-enact its provisions, with such alterations or modifications as the case might seem to require (129). #### Disabling Statute.

Void in-Voidable when means.

English lawyers are familiar with this principle of construction applied as early as the time of Lord Coke to the disabling Statute of 1st Eliz. c. XIX, s. 5, and in several modern reported cases between landlord and tenant, or clauses of forfeiture in leases. Words which make a Bishop's grant " utterly void and of none effect to all intents, constructions, and purposes," have been held not to prevent the grant from being good and binding on the grantor, and in some cases confirmable by the successor; and so a proviso in a lease, that it should be void altogether in case the tenant should neglect to do a certain act, has been held only to make it voidable at the option of the landlord. These authorities illustrate a general principle of construction which for its justice, reasonableness, and convenience be considered of universal application.

S. 5 of Bengal Regulation XLIV of 1793 provides that when a Zemindary is sold at a public sale for discharge of arrears due from the proprietors to the Government, engagements which such proprietors shall have contracted with dependent Talookdars, whose Talooks may be situated in the lands sold, as also all leases to under-farmers and Pottahs to Ryots . . . shall stand cancelled from the day of sale. . .

Held, on the principle of construction above stated, that the existing interests of the Talookdar did not, ipso facts, cease to exist from the date of sale, that the section did not authorize the purchaser to disturb the possession, and that it left him an option to confirm the existing rate of rent (145-6). #### Earlier and later Statutes. EARLIER STATUTE.

Control of by later Statute-Title of later Statute purporting to give scope of earlier one-Later Statute not expressly declaratory.

Where the question was as to the true intent of a particular regulation of the year 1787-whether it operated as a prohibition of a loan to a Zemindar without the consent of the Revenue Officers registered as therein mentioned or whether it amounted to nothing more than a restriction upon the jurisdiction of the court over transactions of that description, unless sanctioned and registered as above mentioned-and the title of a Regulation passed in 1793 was referred to which appeared to treat the restrictions containedin that of 1787 as amounting to prohibitions, held that unless that was the true construction of the Regulation of 1787 itself, that sense could not be imposed upon it by the language of a subsequent Regulation, not expressly declaratory; much less by the title of a Regulation only. (Mr. Justice Bosanquet.) GOPEE MOHUN THAKOOR P. RAJA RADHANAT. (1834) 5 W. R. 72=1 Suth. 8(11)=

Intention of -Later Statute if and when a guide to-The question was whether a person who had obtained an order for a certificate under S. 3 of Act XL of 1858 was a properly constituted guardian, though no formal certificate in pursuance of such order was ever issued to, or obtained by, him, in other words, whether the provisions of the section were sufficiently complied with when a person obtained an order that he should have his certificate.

The Court Fees Act, which was passed in 1870, contained a provision to the following effect: "Except in the Courts hereinbefore mentioned no document of any of the kinds specified as chargeable in the first or second Schedule in this Act annexed shall be filed, exhibited, or recorded in any Court of Justice, or shall be received or furnished by any public officer, unless in respect of such document there be paid a fee of an amount not less than that indicated by either of the said schedules.

The High Court considered that the certificate under S. 3 of Act XL of 1858 could not actually come into existence until the person who has the permission of the Court to obtain it, deposits the requisite amount of stamp duty." They therefore held that a person was not a duly constituted guardian under S. 3 of Act XL of 1858 until he obtained the certificate in manual of the order that he was certificate in pursuance of the order that he was entitled to one.

Held that, if the meaning of the Act in 1858 was that the octaining the certificate was complied with by obtaining the order, any subsequent provision in the Court Fees Act could not make any difference in the intention of the Legislature

The High Court gave as a reason that the Court Fees Act, which was passed twelve years after the Act of 1858, though that the obtaining the certificate is not complete the fee is paid, and the certificate is actually issued. The answer to this is that it must be seen what was the in-

LATER STATUTE.

-Interpretation of -Repeal of earlier Statute-Interpretation resulting in-Propriety-Earlier Statute enacting special law-Later one enacting general law.

Difficulties have frequently been imposed on Courts of Justice in construing statutes, arising from the apparent conflict between special and general legislation; and the rule of construction that special legislation is not repealed by general enactments, unless a clear implication of that intention can be found, was adopted in early times to meet these difficulties, and has been acted on in numerous modern instances. "It is a fundamental rule, in the construction of statutes, that a subsequent statute in general terms is not to be construed to repeal a previous particular statute, unless there are express words to indicate that such was the intention, or unless such an intention appears by necessary implication" (7). (Sir Montague E. Smith.) UNNODA PERSAUD MOOKERJEE P. KRISTO COOMAR MOITRO.

It is a sound principle of all jurisprudence that a prior particular law is not easily to be held to be abrogated by a posterior law, expressed in general terms and by the apparent generality of its language applicable to and covering a number of cases of which the particular law is but one. This as a matter of jurisprudence, as understood in England, has been laid down in a great number of cases, whether the prior law be an express statute, or be the underlying common or customary law of the country. Where general words in a later Act are capable of reasonable and sensible application without extending them to subjects specially dealt with by earlier legislation . . . that earlier and special legislation is not to be held indirectly repealed, altered, or derogated from merely by force of such general words, without any indication of a particular intention to do so (93.4). -Positive enactment in-Qualification or neutralisation of, by reference to earlier statute.

-Express provisions exclusively applicable to one matter-General provisions applicable to different matter-Control of former by latter.

The question was whether the Supreme Court of Judicature at Bombay had power to admit persons as Attornies and solicitors to practise in the Courts there, except such as were qualified in the manner pointed out by the Charter and Letters Patent of 1823 by which that Court was constituted, and its proceedings regulated. In support of the contention that the Court had such a power reference was made to a clause in the Charter, whereby a general power was given to make rules with regard to the general practice of that Court. That general power was, however, clearly applicable to another and a different matter.

Held, that that general power could not be considered as overriding the express directions given in the clause peculiarly and exclusively applicable to the appointment of Solicitors in that Court (440). (Dr. Lushington.) MORGAN v. LEECH. (1841) 2 M.I.A. 428=3 Moo. P.C. 368= 2 Suth. 428=1 Sar. 215.

-Usefulness of - Rejection of, when permissible.

In the construction of the Straits Settlements Evidence Ordinance III of 1893 it is the duty of a Court of law to accept, if that can be done, the illustrations given as being both of relevance and value in the construction of the text. The illustrations should in no case be rejected because they do not square with ideas possibly derived from another system of jurisprudence as to the law with which they or the sections deal. And it would require a very special case to warrant their rejection on the ground of their assumed repugnancy to the sections themselves. It would be the very last resort of construction to make any such assumption. The great usefulness of the illustrations, which have, although not part of the sections, been expressly furnished by the Legislature as helpful in the working and application of the statute, should not be thus impaired (263). Held, that such a method of construction was neither safe nor warranted, and that the correct view was "that the rule and principle of the Colony must be accepted as it is found in its own Evidence Ordinance, and that the acceptance of a rule or principle adopted in or derived from English law is not permissible if thereby the true and actual meaning of the statute under construction he varied, or denied effect " (262). It has often been pointed out by this Board that where there is a positive enactment of the Indian Legislature the Proper course is to examine the language of the statute and to ascertain its proper meaning, uninfluenced by any consideration derived from the previous state of the law-or of the English law upon which it may be founded. Some reliance was placed on the Statutes 28 and 29 Vict. c. 86, S. 1, which enacts, that the advance of money to a firm upon a contract that the lender shall receive a rate of interest varying with the profits, or a share of the profits, shall not, of itself, constitute the lender a partner, or render him responsible as such. It was argued, that this raised an implication that the lender was so responsible by the law existing before the passing of the Act. The enactment is no doubt entitled to great weight as evidence of the law. but it is by no means conclusive; and when the existing law is shewn to be different from that which the Legislature supposed it to be, the implication arising from the statute cannot operate as a negation of its existence (104-5). PRIOR LAW-(Contd.)

It is a sound rule of interpretation to take the words of a statute as they stand and to interpret them ordinarily without any reference to the previous state of the law on the subject or the English law upon which it may be founded; but when it is contended that the Legislature intended by any particular amendment to make substantial changes in the pre-existing law; it is impossible to arrive at a conclusion without considering what the law was previously to the particular enactment and to see whether the words used in the Statute can be taken to effect the change that is suggested as intended. No Court can enforce as valid, that which competent enactments have declared shall not be valid, nor is obedience to such an enactment a thing from which a court can be dispensed by the consent of the parties, or by a failure to plead or to argue the point at the outset. The enactment is prohibitory. It is not confined to affording a party a protection, of which he may avail himself or not as he pleases. It is not framed solely for the protection of the revenue and to be enforced solely at the instance of the revenue officials, nor is the prohibition limited to cases, for which a penalty is exigible. The expression of an agreement for sea insurance, otherwise than in a policy, is a thing forbidden in the public interest, and the statutory insistence on a policy is no mere collateral requirement or prescription of the proper way of making such an agree-

Their Lordships therefore gave effect to the objection that the contract alleged by the plaintiff, being a contract for sea insurance, was unenforceable under S. 7 of the Indian Stamp Act of 1899, because it was a contract by word of mouth and not expressed in a sea policy, although that objection was not taken in the written statement of the defendants or in either of the Courts below (128-9). There have been some cases lately, in which a question has been raised whether the party has been estopped from taking advantage of any irregularity, even the non-compliance with an Act of Parliament. In Tyerman v. Smith (25 L. J. Q. B. 359), the case had been referred under the compulsory powers of the statute, 17 & 18 Vict., c. 125, S. 15. The award was not made within three months, and the time was not enlarged by the Court, or a Judge. as it ought to have been, or by the written consent of the parties; but both parties having gone before the arbitrator after the time had elapsed, it was held that the party against whom judgment had been signed upon the award was estopped from taking advantage of the non-compliance with the statute In Andrews v. Elliott (25 L.J.Q.B. 1) the parties, under the Common Law Procedure Act, chose to refer the case to a Judge and not to a jury, but that, according to the Act of Parliament, ought to have been done by a written consent. It was not done by written consent, but the court said, that having chosen to act on the oral consent, the party was precluded from taking advantage of the want of a written consent (484-5). The appellant says thar under the C. P. C. of 1882 some Indian courts had held the Procedure Code of 1882 inapplicable in toto to Letters Patent appeals; that the Legislature had these decisions before it when the Code was re-enacted in 1908; that the changes of form and language between the Act of 1908 and that of 1852 are not substantial, and that accordingly the Legislature must be deemed to have adopted the judicial interpretation of the language used in 1882, when it repeated that language in substance in 1908.

Quatre as to how far this mode of construing a re-enacting statute is in point, where all that has been decided is the effect of the older statute upon the provisions of another legal instrument, and not the actual meaning of the statute re-macted itself. INTERPRETATION OF-(Could).

-Prior to the Limitation Act of 1908, the Privy Council had held that a suit by a reversionary heir to recover possession of the last male owner's property on the death of his widow which involved the decision of an issue as to the validity or invalidity of the defendant's adoption was not a suit within the meaning of Art. 118 of the Limitation Act of 1877. Nevertheless the legislature re-enacted Art. 118 of the Act of 1908 in identical terms.

Held that, on a question of the interpretation of Art. 118 of the Act of 1908, it was a point of considerable importance to note that the Legislature passed the Act of 1908 with the article in question in precisely the same language as that used in 1877 after the construction already put upon it by the Privy Council. -Amending Act introducing substantive provision-Retrospective operation if has,

In 1924 the Sydney Corporation Act of that year was passed and it enacted that that Act and a prior Act of the year 1902 and the Acts amending it should be construed along with the 1924 Act as the principal Act. S. 17 of the 1924 Act provided that "Notwithstanding the provisions of any other Act the rate of interest payable upon compensation for land acquired by the Council by resumption or by the realignment method, or by any compulsory purchase shall be 6 per cent. per annum." The Act of 1924 came into operation on 17.9-1924.

On 6-6-1924, the Municipal Council of Sydney, in accordance with the provisions of the prior Act of 1902 and the Acts amending it, acquired the land of the respondent, who thereupon became entitled to compensation. The question in the appeal was as to whether, in respect of the amount of compensation payable to the respondent, she was entitled to interest at the 6 per cent. provided for by S. 17 of the Act of 1924 as and from 17.9.24 when it came into operation. The contention of the Municipal Council was that S. 17 applied only to cases in which land was acquired after the Act of 1924 came into operation, that is, after 17-9-24 and that it was inapplicable to cases of land acquired before

Held, affirming the court below, that S. 17 applied to the case and that by virtue of it respondent was entitled to the enhanced rate of 6 per cent. provided by it from and after 17-9-24.

S. 17 must be read as laying down a principle standing by itself, and to prevail, as the section declares, notwithstanding the provisions of any other Act. The provision in the section is a substantive one which is not made to depend on any reference to corresponding provisions in the earlier statutes. The words of the section are unambiguous. They give a title to the higher race of interest as from September 17th, and apply subsequently to the passing of the Act which contains this fresh provision - compensation for land acquired prior thereto, notwithstanding that the Act was assented to later. If the words are "It shall and may be so and so done, by such and such officer and body, then the word "may" is held in all soundness of construction to confer a power, but the word "shall" is held to make that power, or the exercise of that power, compulsory; cases are not wanting where, even without the use of so stringent a word as "shall", it has been held that a power so conveyed must be executed. which would have been actionable but for statutory powers, and such damage or loss must be occasioned by the construction of the authorised works as distinct from their user (65).

Where the mischief of which complaint is made is caused by what is done or lands taken from the same owner, there is no reason why a claim for compensation in respect of injury to adjoining premises might not be successfully made on account of their probable depreciation by reason of vibration, or smoke or noise, occasioned by passing trains (64).

No doubt a difficulty arises in the assessment of amount where the mischief complained of arises, not only on the land which has been taken from the claimants, but also on land over which they had no ownership or claim, but this is no reason for refusing to entertain a claim. so far as the damage claimed can be shown to arise from the apprehended legal use of the lands taken from them (67). The problem of assessing the amount in a case in which the mischief complained of has arisen partly on lands taken from the complainants, and partly on other lands outside their property, can only be settled by a consideration of all the circumstances in a particular case (69). Applicability to contracts of.

The enacting words of 22 Geo. III. c. 45 (1782) do not apply to all contracts. Their application is limited in two ways. In the first place the Member of Parliament must have "directly or indirectly" undertaken the contract with "the Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury, or the Navy or Victualling Office," or "the Master-General or Board of Ordinance" or "any one or more of such Commissioners" or "any other person or persons whatsoever." In the second place, it must appear that the contract was made "for or on account of the public service" (738). (Lord Chancellor.) SIR STUART SAMUEL, In the matter of the public service "(738).

by. Object of-Mischief intended to be guarded against 22 Geo. III, c. 45 (1782) itself declares that it was made to preserve the freedom and independence of Parliament; and the mischief guarded against is the sapping of that freedom and independence by Members being admitted to profitable contracts (738). The House of Commons appointed a Select Committee to consider whether Sir Stuart Samuel had vacated his seat as a member of the House of Commons by reason of the above-mentioned facts. The Committee recommended a reference to the Judicial Committee for its opinion on a definite question of law. The House adopted that course while reserving to itself the right of ultimate decision. On a special reference made by His Majesty to the Judicial Committee under the provisions of 3 & 4 William IV, c. 41, S. 4, whether by reason of the above facts Sir Stuart Samuel had forfeited his seat as a member of the House of Commons, held, that the contracts in question were made for the public service of the Crown in India and with an officer of the British Government within the meaning of S. 1 of the Act of Paylament of 1782 (22 Gec. III, c. 45) and that Sir Stuart Samuel forfeited his seat by reason of the firm in which he was a partner having entered into such contracts. (Lord Chanceller.) SIR STUART SAMUEL. In the matter of.

-Officer of British Government-Contract with
-Secretary of State for India in Council-Contract with
-If prohibited by section-Government of India Act of 1855, S. 65-Effect.

The contracts were expressed to be made with the Secretary of State in Council, pursuant to the Act of 1858 for the better Government of India, and were made with the concurrence of a majority of the Council, to be paid for out of the revenues of India as required by that Act, and without any personal liability on the Secretary of State. And by S. 65 of that Act, " the Secretary of State in Council shall and may sue and be sued as well in India as in England by the name of the Secretary of State in Council as a body corporate." It was urged that it was not with the Secretary of State at all that the contract was made, but with a corporation. Their Lordships cannot take this view. A contract is nonetheless made with the Secretary of State that he has to obtain the concurrence of others before making it, and that he and they are designated by this Statute as liable to be sued or to sue on it as a corporate body. He and they have distinct function prescribed by the Statute which enables them to bind their successors, and this provision affords facilities for litigation which are not afforded by a Petition of Right. But this is merely machinery; the personality of the Secretary of State is not merged in any corporation by the statute nor is that of the Council. In some particulars they can check him or he can override them. They and be remain with separate and possibly conflicting responsibilities, though for purposes of litigation they can be treated as though they were one legal personality. These contracts were made with one of His Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State and with his Council, or with the concurrence of a majority of His Council it matters not, for they were made at all events with him (769-70).

Held, therefore, that a contract made by a member of the House of Commons with the Secretary of State for India in Council was a contract made with an offcer of the British Government within the meaning of S. I of the Act of Parliament, 1782 (22 Geo. III, c. 45) and was prohibited by the section. (Lord Chanceller.) SIR STUART SAMUEL, In the matter of. (1913) 19 I.C. 765=17 C.W.N. 735 (740) was transferred to the direct control of the Crown, acting through officers whose duties were prescribed by the Act. One of these officers is a Secretary of State. In early times there was one English Secretary of State. Then there! were two British Secretaries of State, and before 1858 the number was increased to four. The Act of 1858 created a fifth, who is paid out of the revenues of India. To him are in practice allotted the duties of transacting that part of the business relating to India which requires the intervention of a Secretary of State for India. But he is in fact one of His Majesty's five Principal Secretaries of State and as such can discharge most, if not all, of the duties of the other four, as they can discharge most, if not all, of his duties. He is an officer of the British Government in the fullest sense (769).

S. 1 of the Act of Parliament, 1782 (22 Geo. All the persons enumerated in the section were servants of the Crown in 1782 (the date of the Act) holding offices in the British as contrasted with the Irish Government or any other Government of the King's dominions or dependencies beyond the seas. They were officers of the British Government, which was also the Imperial Government of the King.

Words-Public purpose-Meaning of.

The Act of Parliament, 1782 (22 Geo. III, c. 45) prohibits a member of the House of Commons from entering into a contract with an officer of the British Government "for or on account of the public service." It was contended that the words " for or on account of the public service" meant " the public service of Great Britain " (now incorporated in the United Kingdom), and that no service could be so denominated unless it was paid for out of moneys voted by Parliament, or at all events out of British money. It does not seem to their Lordships that the public service required by the Act need be one either executed or required within Great Britain or paid for out of any particular fund. No reason can be given for this cutting down the scope of the Act. The source from which contracts are to be paid for is immaterial. So is the place where they are made (768). (Lord Chancellor.) Charge - Execution sale of property subject to-Payment of charge by purchaser-Sale subsequently set ande - Purchazer's right to stand in shoes of chargeholder.

Property sold in execution of a decree was subject to a charge created by the judgment-debtor in favour of a third party. The execution purchaser on being duly put into possession of the property purchased by him paid off the amount due to the charge-holder. The execution sale was, however, set aside on appeal, and the question arose as to what were the rights of the execution purchaser with respect to the amount paid off by him to the charge-holder.

The Indian Succession Act of 1865 is Codifying Act, and, in regard to the question whether or not it was intended to alter the prior law, the proper mode of interpreting the Act is that laid down by Lord Herschell in the Bank of England v. Their Lordships cannot give countenance to the principle that, even though the deceased was a Christian, still be by his acts made such an indication as the law would respect to the effect that his succession was not to be governed by the Indian Succession Act. The cases of Airaben v. Abraham and Gejapathi Raihika v. Gajapathi Nelamani decided before the Indian Succession Act cannot modify or interpret it. The genaral rule is enacted in S. 2 of the Succession Act, and the exception which bears upon the present case is S. 331. The exception would apply only if the deceased had remained in or become a convert to Hinduism. In that case the Mitakshara faw would apply. If he was a Christian, the Succession Act would apply. An Oudh taluqdar, by his will, appointed his eldest son as taluqdar after him, and gave to each of his three younger sons, certain villages out of the taluqa, to be held absolutely with heritable and transferable rights as under-proprietors if and when they or any of them wished to separate from among themselves with the taluqdar", the taluqa was to remain undivided and the income therefrom was to be "spent on the whole family," after paying Government and village dues. The testator also directed the division of his movable property in case of a separation, and by paragraph 8 he declared: " I have executed this will with the consent of all my sons and have got them to sign it as witnesses with this very purpose so that this will may be acted upon fully and they may not quarrel among themselves after my demise.

The will was signed by the testator as "executant", and below the testator's signature, after the signature of one of the witnesses, who was admittedly an attesting witness, there were the signatures of his four sons, and below them, the signatures of three other persons who also admittedly signed as attesting witnesses. In the margin on the left of those signatures, and just above the signature of the first attesting witness, appeared the word "Witnesses,"

The question for accision was whether or not the legatees entitled to the benefit of the legacies, if valid, signed the will as attesting witnesses.

The evidence was to the effect that the testator had summoned his four sons to his presence, and having explained that he had made a will leaving his property to them, asked them to attach their signatures to the will, not as attesting witnesses, but in token of their consent, with a view to avoiding disputes after his death; and that they attached their signatures, pursuant to that request. The witnesses agreed that, while the testator invited others to sign as attesting witnesses, he addressed no such invitation to the sons, but asked them explicitly to sign for the special purpose of expressing their consent, with the view of avoiding dissensions in the future.

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the act of each of the sons was, openly and palpably, with the knowledge of all present, the act of expressing consent, and nothing else, and that in such circumstances the signers were not attesting witnesses, within the meaning of S. 54 of the Succession Act. When a particular construction of a clause in a will would ascribe to it a meaning according to which it would not only defeat the object of the clause itself, but nullify the distribution of his property which the testator was seeking to bring about in making his will, while the more reason able and natural reading would give the clause the effect intended by the testator and bring about the result intended by the testator, held, that the Courts were by .S. 71 of the Succession Act enjoined to give the clause the latter construction. Clause 11 of the will of a Parsi directed that on the expiration of the first ten years from the testator's death, or from and after the death of his last surviving son, whichever should first happen, the trustees should divide the Bombay properties (but the Mahalaxmi bungalow and No. 56, Hormasjee Street House, subject to the right of re-idence pranted by cl. 9 of the will), or the sale proceeds thereof, and the investments for the time being representing the tame, into five equal sharers, and should hold each such share as that of each son upon trust to pay the income of each such share to such son until his death, and from and after the death of each son, or, if he should have died previously to pay the same to such persons as should be presamplively entitled to the corpus under the provisions in that behalf thereinafter contained, until the death of his last surviving son, and from and after the death of the last surviving son to hold each of such shares upon such trues as such son might have pursuant to the power in that behalf thereinafter given in cl. 12 directed.

Cl. 12 authorised every son whose interest should not have ceased under cl. 16 to dispose by will or deed upon such treats and upon such conditions with such restrictions, and provisions as he might think fit, but subject to proportion of shares and order of privity thereinafter

1870, made to apply to wills made by any Hindu in the issue, widow or next of kin, of the share which should be treated as allotted to him as aforesaid, provided that he should exercise the power in the manner following :-

(1) If the son had sons or lineal descendants of sons, then in their favour only. (2) In default of those, in favour of his widow and daughters or lineal descendants of daughters. (3) Only in default of any lineal descendants male or female in favour of any other next of kin.

Cl. 13 directed that, in default of the exercise of the power so given, each son's share should devolve on his sons or their issue for stirges, and failing such sons of issue, on his sons' widows and daughters, or the issue of the latter. In the event of failure of sons and daughters and their issue the widow of any son was to take onefourth of his share, and the testator's remaining sons were to have the remaining three-fourths added to their shares,

Cl. 14 devised the residue of the testater's property to the executors upon trust to convert for payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, and to divine the balance into five equal parts, and to pay one past to each of his sons for his absolute use with a proviso that the trustees should not be bound to sell for ten years, and should in the measurime be entitled to carry on the husiness of the testator.

Cl. 15 directed that in case any person beneficially entitled to any share in the income or corput of the estate should (1) alienate or charge his interest; or (2) become lankropt; or (3) should have decree passed against him for over Rs. 25,000; or (4) should become indelated in any sum or sums exceeding Rs. 25,000 his interest should thereupon cease and become void, and it was directed how such interest should be applied according as it was a share in the income or in the owfus.

Cl. 16 directed that if any beneficiary should ceare to profess the Zoroastrian faith, or Lecome a convert, or marry a person not born of Pan'i parents, his interest should forthwith crose and become wid as if he or she had died, and the tractices should hold such interest in trust for such persons or person as should be entitled to it on the death of such beneficiary, but subject to the provisions of cls. 15 and

Held that, subject to provision being made for the valid bequests as to which no question arose, and for giving effect to the rights of occupation and maintenance provided by cls. 9 and 10 of the will, the five sons of the testator had a present title to have the residee of the testator's estate divided Letween them-

The limitations in cls. 11 to 13 contravene the provisions of S. 100 of the Succession Act. The Lequests to the rons' daughters, widows and issue of the testator's sens thus made do not in all possible instances dispose of the subjectmatter to which they apply and so fail to comprise the whole of the remaining interest of the testator. It is obvious that he has reserved contingent rights which might well prove to be of value. The end orn Leneficiaries do not take the whole interest undisposed of by reason of the title of his own sons being only for their lives. But the difficulties are not exhausted by these considerations. Cl. 15 gives over the share in income or corfus alike of any lereficiary who alienates, in any of a comber of ways, and in that event creates a discretionary trust, which may extend, so far as the income is concerned, only to a part of it, for the benefit according to selection by the trustees of some others of a class of beneficiaries somewhat wider than that of those who are to take under the clauses just referred to. The 16th clause also puts an end to the title of every beneficiary who ceases to profess, or marries any one not professing, the Zoroastrian faith, and gives the interest over -Bequest contrary to-Distribution to take place after all sons who might be born to sons of testator had attained their majority-Will directing-Validity.

A Hindu by his will appointed his ehlest son, the appellant, to look after his estate and in certain events to divide the estate amongst his grandsons. The High Court held that on the true construction of the will, the intention of the testator was to empower the appellant to divide his property into five shares, as he had five sons, and to deliver the shares to the grandsons in the case of sons with male issue, and in the case of sons without male issue to the sons themselves. "When my grandsons may attain their age", meaning thereby that the distribution was to take place only after all the sons who might have been born to the sons of the testator had attained their majority. The High Court held that the disposition was contrary to the principles underlying Ss. 101 and 102 of the Indian Succession Act and that the will was therefore void with the result that the estate was to be administered on the footing of intestacy, Their Lordships, on appeal, upheld the judgment of the High Court. (Lord Macnaghten.) SUBRAMANIA PILLAI r. MURUGESA PILLAL (1912) 21 L.C. 282= 17 C.W.N. 488.

-Daughters-Bequest to, as a class for their lives-Remainder to their children on attaining 21-Validity of latter bequest-Age of majority of children subsequently postponed to 21 under Indian Majority Act-Effect.

Under S. 101 of the Indian Succession Act no bequest is valid whereby the vesting of the thing bequeathed may be delayed beyond the lifetime of one or more persons living at the testator's decease, and the minority (ending at 18) of some person who shall be in existence at the expiration of that period and to whom if he attains full age, the thing bequeathed is to belong. By S. 102 of that Act, if a bequest is made to a class of persons, with regard to some of whom it is inoperative by reason of the rules contained in S. 101, the bequest is wholly void.

The will of a Hindu, who died in 1904, after directing the formation of a fund for the payment of a monthly sum to his widow for life, directed that his trustees were (a) to apportion the residuary trust funds into as many equal shares as he had daughters who were either living at his death, or, having prodeceased him, had left issue them and him surviving; (b) to pay the income of such shares to the respective daughters during life, and, after the death of each daughter, to hold her share aforesaid for her children who should attain 21 years; (c) if any daughter died without lawful issue, to hold the said share in trust for the children of the other daughters who should attain 21 years; and (d) if a daughter dying in the testator's lifetime left lawful issue surviving the testator and attaining the age of 21 years, such issue were to take the share appropriated as aforesaid to the said daughter as if she had survived the testator.

Held that as the bequest, treated as at the testator's death, made delay beyond the lifetime of the daughters and the minority of some of their children possible, the bequest in favour of the children was inoperative.

The provisions of the Indian Majority Act of 1875 are of no avail as against this conclusion, because at the testator's death-for this purpose the relevant date-it was not clear, and could not be certain, whether all or any of the members of the classes in whose favour the disposition was made would ever have guardians appointed. The provision of the will fixing 21 in every case as the age of vesting was, therefore, in contravention of S. 101, and the whole gift is invalid under S. 102 of the Succession Act. Contingent bequest to posthumous son-Exception to S. 107-Bequest coming within-Conditions.

The material clauses of the will of a Parsi were as fol-

"(5) My wife R is now in the family way. And she has expressed her free will to live as a member of the family with my executor, my brother C. As to whatever children (child) that may be born of her womb, my brother shall bring up and maintain the same. And my said executor shall defray all the expenses in connection therewith out of my property and effects. And he shall maintain the family. (The expression 'maintenance of the family' includes that of the maintenance of the said executor also) . . . . should a son be born he also shall be cherished and maintained. and educated and brought up. And when he comes of age by executor or after his death his executors or executrices shall make over the whole of my remaining properties to the said son. Should the child (whether) daughter or son born of the womb of my wife, die in tender age (i.d., a minor) and should my wife for any reason whatever be unwilling to live as a member of the family with my executor, then my executor shall out of my property purchase Bonds for Rs. 5,000 bearing interest at 4 per cent. at the market rate and shall transfer the same to the name of my wife R.

If the maintenance of the family did not exhaust the whole income, a discretionary power was given to the execufor by cl. 14 of the will to spend the surplus income in giving encuragement to education and works in science and acts as well as in erecting troughs for cows and cattle to drink water from. Cl. 15 of the will bequeathed the testator's properties in three specified places to his brother C, and cancelled the right of his heirs from all those. Cl. 16 contained a residuary bequest to the testator's executors.

The parties were governed by the Indian Succession Act

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the bequest to the testator's son was contingent within the meaning of the first clause of S. 107 of Succession Act.

Held further, reversing the appellate Court and restoring the trial Judge, that the case did not fall within the exception to S. 107 of the said Act.

There is no direct gift to the son, but only a direction to hand over, not any particular fund, but the whole of the salor's remaining properties when the son comes of age-Nor is the income of such remaining properties to be emoyed in any way in accordance with the terms of the cition absolutely for the son, nor is it directed that the plied for his benefit. -Proving-"Unless a contrary intention appears by the well" - Implication of - Permissibility.

It was suggested that in S. 111 of the Act of 1865 the qualification or proviso "unless a contrary intention appears by the will" is to be understood. In some sections of the Act those words are to be found. Full effect must be given to them where they occur. But where the qualification is not expressed there is surely no reason for implying it. The introduction of such a qualification into S. 111 would make the enactment almost nugatory (27). (Lord Macnaghten.) NORENDRA NATH SIECAR : KAMALABASINI DASI.

MARRIAGE-UNCERTAIN EVENT OF-BEQUEST IN. -What amounts to-Will-Construction.

By his will a Hindu made provision for his wives and for his two daughters, the clause relating to the daughters being as follows: - When they will be married and if they desire to live in separate houses the person in whose management my property will be at the time will make separate houses for them in the vicinity of my house from the income of my property. For the maintenance of my daughters I fix an allowance of Rs. 600 a year for each of them. As long as the daughters will live in the separate houses in this place they will get the fixed allowances respectively; but if the daughters do not live in this place they will get Rs. 10,"

It was contended that the bequests to the daughters were given only in the uncertain event of marriage, and that as that event did not happen in the lifetime of the testator the bequests never took effect under S. 111 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865.

Held that the contention was not well founded (10-1).

The payment of the maintenance is not made contingent on the marriage of the ladies. The will deals with the maintenance in a clause which stands by itself and which must be read by itself. The clause contains no reference to marriage or to any other future event. S. 111 therefore has no bearing on the construction to be put on the bequest (11). (Lord Mersey.) WIDOW EXECUTRIX-LIFE ESTATE TO, WITH REMAINDER TO ADOPTED SON OR HIS MALE ISSUE WHO MAY SURVIVE HER.

Gift over to nephews in default -Validity of.

A Hindu, subject to the Dayabhaga school, executed a will by which he appointed his wife his sole executrix and authorised her to adopt Dattaka Putraka. The will provided, "In case of death of an adopted son my said wife shall adopt one after another five sons in succession. my said wife dies without adopting a son, or if such adopted son predeceases her without leaving any male issue, in such case my estate after the death of my said wife shall pass to the sons of my sister B who may be living at the time of my death.'

On the testator's death, his widow applied for and obtained probate of the will. She adopted a son who died without issue and herself died shortly after without making a further adoption, and the question arose whether the gift over to the testator's nephews took effect. It was contended that it failed under the provisions of S. 111 of the Succession Act.

Held that, on the right construction of the will, the estate was in the widow during her life, that the gift over was expressly declared to take effect after her decease in case of the failure of the adoptions without securing the object the Administration with will annexed—Grant of, by competed

SCOPE OF.

Principle of Lassence v. Tierney-Enactment in statutory form of.

S. 126 of the Indian Succession Act, 1865, is an enactment in statutory form of a principle which was already familiar to English lawyers. The case of Lassence v. Tierney shows that where, reading the will as a whole, the intention to confer an absolute estate in the first instance is expressed or implied, and following on that absolute estate there is a provision for settlement which in the event cannot be operative, then the words of prior intention prevail and the absolute estate takes effect notwithstanding the failure of the provision for settlement that follows. In India the words in S. 126 must be followed as laying down the principle, but the principle is not substantially different from what was expressed in Lassence v. Tierney. (Viscount Haldane.) Court within province-Subsequent limitation of grant by High Court-Validity.

The suit was by the daughters of a deceased Hindu to recover from the adopted son of the diceased arrears of maintenance provided for under the will of the deceased. At the time the suit was instituted no letters-of-administration had been granted, but, pending the suits, the widow of the deceased for whom also provision was made in his will. obtained from the District Judge a grant of letters-of-administration with the will annexed. The grant was, on appeal, modified by the High Court by limiting it to the realization of the maintenance allowance provided for the widow; but before the letters-of-administration could be recalled and altered the widow died and the letters were never formally altered.

Held that "probate" of the will as defined by S. 3 of the Succession Act had in fact been obtained, and the provisions of S, 167 thereof had therefore been strictly complied with (12).

The will was proved before a Court of competent jurisdiction within the province, and that Court duly issued to the widow a certified copy of the will under the seal of the Court with a grant of administration to the estate of the testator. The provisions of the section were therefore strictly complied with. The sabsequent limitation of the grant to so much of the estate of the deceased as might be sufficient to satisfy the widow's claim, even if right, appearto be immaterial (11-8). (Lord Mercy.) #### Applicability.

Wrong-Suit founded on-Case of. Act XXVII of 1860 which provides for the granting of certificate is intended for the protection of debtors to a cased's estate. It has no application to a case in which the right of action is founded entirely on wrong and not on

The plaintiff and the 2nd defendant were sons of a Mahomedan lady. The plaintiff sued to recover from the lat defendant certain promissory notes, commonly called Company's paper, of the Indian Government which appertised to the estate of the deceased. He alleged that the notes had been illegally sold by the 2nd defendant to the Ist and claimed either re-titution of the notes or their value, The plaintiff described inheritance as the base or root of his title to the property, and alleged the illegal sale or transfer of, and the illegal dealing with, the notes as the wrong done to him, and that the alleged violation of his right constituted his cause of action. Held that the Act was entirely inapplicable to such a suit.

The 1st defendant was pever a delitor of the mother, nor did his taking the share, or property, or part of the share, or property, of the plaintiff, by an invalid title, constitute him a debter to the estate (521). (Lord Justice Giffard.) IKBALOODOWLAH 7. SAH BUNARSEE DOSS.

Effect of in Civil suit.

An application by a Hindu widow for a certificate under Act 27 of 1860, enabling her to collect the debts of her deceased husband, was opposed by her husband's brother, who alleged that he and the deceased were undivided and that he became entitled to the deceased's estate by survivorship. The Court, however, granted a certificate to the widow, and the grant was confirmed on appeal.

In a suit brought by the brother of the deceased against the widow in the Court of the Subordinate Judge for the recovery of the estate of the deceased in her possession on the ground that the deceased and he were undivided, held that the order granting the certificate did not constitute

The objection that the suit was not maintainable in the absence of a certificate under the provisions of S. 3 of Act XXVII of 1800 was decided against the respondent. by the Civil Judge, and is not made one of the grounds of appeal to the Judicial Commissioner. This would be a sufficient answer to the objection if it were merely formal; as it would be in the case of a person who, being plainly entitled to the whole debt due to a deceased person, might be suing for it without a certificate (829). Suit by appellant to recover from his father, the respondent, the sum of Rs. 50,000 as his share of the dower alleged to have been settled on his deceased mother. The appellant's case was that the contract amount of dower was 9 lakhs of rupees: that the respondent, the appellant, and three daughters of the deceased, who were made joint defendants to the suit, were the heirs of the deceased; that he (appellant), as one of the co-heirs, was entitled to threetenths of the amount fixed; but that, in deference to the law which prevailed in Outh, and having regard to the circumstances of the respondent, he had limited his claim to Rs. 50,000.

Held that, in the suit as framed, the objection to the absence of a certificate under S. 3 of Act XXVII of 1860 involved considerations which constituted substantial objections to the manner in which the suit was brought (829),

The plaint is obviously limited to the recovery of the plaintiff's share in the dower. Though the plaintiff's sisters are made formal parties, the plaint does not ask for a binding declaration as to the gross amount of the whole dower. It cannot be contended that a debtor to a Mahomedan estate is liable to be vexed by a separate suit by every cosharer in that estate for his share of the debt. The Act invoked was probably in part designed to protect the debtor against a multiplicity of suits. And as between the cosharers there are obvious objections to allowing a scramble for shares in an entire debt, since the first who takes out execution may exhaust the whole means of the debtor. Again if the respondent is treated as the sharer in possession of the entire estate of the deceased lady, and the suit, as one in the nature of an administration suit, it ought to be framed as an administration suit. No co-sharer would be entitled to receive his share until the debts of the deceased had been ascertained, and provision made for the payment of them. Until that is done the amount of the share is uncertain; and if the appellant had clothed himself with the character of an administrator by obtaining a certificate under the Act, he must have given security for the due

ENGLISH LAW OF.

-Basis of -Inapplicability to Hindus and Mahomedans of.

The English law of forfeiture for suicide is not one which can be considered properly applicable to Hindoos and Mahomedans (427).

The grounds on which suicide is treated in England as an offence against the law, and punished by forefeiture of the offender's goods and chattels to the king are that it is an offence against nature, against God, and against the king-Against nature, because against the instinct of self-preser vation; against God, because against the commandment, "Thou shall not kill," and a felo de se kills his own soul; against the king, in that thereby he loses a subject. These considerations cannot extend to native Indians, not Chris tians, not recognising the authority of the Decalogue, and owing at the time when this law is supposed to have been introduced no allegiance to the King of Great British (427-8).

The nature of the punishment also is very little applicable to such persons. A part of it is, that the body of the offender should be deprived of the rites of Christian buril in consecrated ground. The forfeiture extends to chatter

Introduction into India of-Applicability of to Natives and Europeans in Calcutta in 1844-English lazz with respect to other offences-Applicability to matires of.

The English law of felo de se including the forfeiture attached to it had not been extended in the year 1844 to Hindoos destroying themselves in Calcutta (429).

None of the charters contains any forms applicable to the panishment, by forfeiture or otherwise of the crime of selfmurder, and with respect to other offences to which the charters did extend, the application of the criminal law of England to Natives not Christians, to Mahomedans and Hindoos, has been treated as subject to qualifications without which the execution of the law would have been attended with intolerable injustice and cruelty (427).

RIGHT OF.

Abandonment by Government of -Claim by it subsequently-Maintainability.

The Crown claimed a portion of the personal estate of a Hindu, who destroyed himself at Calcutta in 1844, and was found by inquisition to have been felo de se-The widow of the deceased was advised by counsel to take proceedings to set aside the verdict of felo de w. as being against the weight of evidence as well as on the ground of madirection by the Coroner in his charge to the jury, but no proceedings were taken for that purpose, in consequence of the Government of India, or their legal advisers, stating to her legal advisers that they would not prefer any claim under such verdict of felo de se. In the absence of any dalm to forfeiture by the Government of India, and in accordance with such waiver, the whole of the real estate, and such of the personal estate of the deceased as was not in court, was absolutely given up to the widow.

by certain decrees for enhancement of rent obtained by them against H, the mother of the respondent on the ground that in those proceedings she represented the respondent and therefore the estate. In support of his contention that they were so produced the respondent relied upon (1) a statement of the appellants in a petition presented by them on 19.1-1878 that the name of the respondent was not registered in their serishta, and he was not a tenant of the mouzah in question, that the name of // alone was registered in their serishta, and that she held the mouzah under them, and (2) the fact that the appellants had seed H after the respondent came of age for rent due partly before and partly after that

Held that the circumstances relied upon were weighty evidence against the contention put forward by the appellants in the suit, but the evidence amounted only to admissions by them that // was the tenant, and that as no fact was proved which would make the admissions conclusive against them, they were not estopped from contending to the contrary (186).

Held further that the evidence of certain dowls and kabuliyats executed by II in pursuance of a compromise effected after the said decrees, which documents she executed as the mother and guardian of the respondent, oxtweighed the said admissions (186). Withdrawal of suit pursuant to-Plaintiff's application for-Defendant's rokil not admitting compromit-Order allowing withdrawal on payment of defendant's costs in case of-Propriety.

After the trial of a suit had proceeded up to a certain stage the plaintiff applied for the dismissal of the suit upon the ground that a razinama had been entered into and agreed to by the parties by which the plaintiffs and defendants appointed arbitrators in regard to the case between them, and got the case decided by arbitrators. The defendants' vakil represented that they were not aware of the razinama, but, as the plaintiffs' vakil admitted the razinama. the Court removed the suit from the file, and ordered that the plaintiffs should bear all the costs.

Held that as the plaintiff admitted that he desired to withdraw his suit, and to pay the costs, with a precautionary recital in favour of the defendants that they did not in the least degree admit any of the statements contained in the razinama, the justice of the case was obviously met by llowing the plaintiffs to withdraw their suit, and ordering them to pay the costs of the soit thus withdrawn (867). A testator devised considerable property, both real ann personal, for charitable purposes, amongst which he directed certain sums to be set apart for the liberation of persons imprisoned for debt, and the endowment and establishment of a college at Lucknow in the dominions of the King of Oudh. A suit having been instituted in the Supreme Court of Calcutta to administer the will, the Court directed an inquiry whether the college could be established and the bequest for the liberation of prisoners carried into effect. with reference to the testator's intention, and the sanction of the Government at Lucknow. On the subject of the bequest for the liberation of prisoners, the Master found in the negative, and reported that, with respect to the establishment of the college, there was not sufficient evidence to enable him to state whether it could be established with reference to the testator's intention, and the sanction of the Lucknow Government; but as no further evidence was likely to be obtained, he appended the correspondence with the British Resident at Lucknow, by which it appeared that though the King of Oudh did not object to the astablishment of the college he held out no expectation that he would afford it his countenance or support. The report having been confirmed, and a decree made thereon, the Supreme Court, on a re-hearing of the cause, directed an inquiry whether the Governor-General in Council had the means of giving effect to the bequest to the college at Lucknow, and whether he was willing to receive the funds bequeathed for that purpose; the Master found that the Governor-General was willing to receive the funds, but did not state whether he had the means of giving effect to the bequest. The Court, however, thereupon directed the payment of the funds to the Governor-General or such person as he should appoint.

Upon appeal held, by the Judicial Committee, that through the reference to the Master on the re-hearing, after the confirmation of his previous report, was informal, and if objected to at the time would have been fatal, yet as no objection had been taken, and the Master had not satisfied the whole of inquiry, by stating whether the Governor-General had the means of carrying the testator's intention into effect, that part of the decree affirming the Master's report, and directing the payment of the fund to the Governor-General, must be reversed, and the case sent back to ascertain that fact; their Lordships being of opinion that under the existing relations between the East India Company and the King of Oudh, an arrangement may be made for the appointment of a trustee to carry the Lucknow bequest into effect, under the directions and subject to the brindletion of the Supreme Court. thought that the conduct of the appellant, as one of the Directors of the Union Rank of Calcutta, was such, that they could not, consistently with their duty to the public, retain him in his offices. The Court in effect removed him from his offices.

The evidence showed that the appellant was a shareholder and director of the Union Bank at Calcutta; that he was a party to deceptive statements, contained in the half-yearly reports of the concern, as to the state of the affairs of the Bank, and also availed himself, in the character of Director, to obtain credit to a considerable amount upon his personal security only, which, by the condition of the deed of co-partnership of the Bank, amounted to a breach of trust. With respect to the fulfilment of the duties of his offices of Master, etc., however, it was admitted that not the slightest imputation rested upon him.

Held, affirming the Supreme Court, that the appellant was no longer fit to hold the offices he had thereto filled in the Supreme Court (160).

We concur with Sir Lawrence Peel, that the appellant may not have intended to wrong the Union Bank of a rupee, that there may have been no intentional or conscious fraud; but there was an absence of all just sense of the obligations, of the duties undertaken, and a disregard of those principles of truth and sincerity and faithful adherence to contracts, which not only the shareholders but the public at large, had a right to expect from those who had accepted the office of Director (159). A question was raised as to the tenure by which the appellant held the offices of Master and Accountant-General of the Supreme Court at Calcutta, and of Examiner in Equity. We do not think it necessary to enter into that question, for whatever be the tenure of those offices, there must exist in the Supreme Court the power of suspending officers on account of misconduct, and the only question can be, whether the misconduct imputed is sufficiently proved, and if proved, it be a sufficient ground for calling upon the Court to protect the administration of justice by the suspension of the officer so misconducting himself (146). ### Testamentary jurisdiction of.

-Nature of originally and subsequently. Testamentary parisdiction was first given to the Supreme Courts by their original Charters, that in Bengal dated in 1774 being the first. And it was then given as a branch of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, and was to be administered according to the ecclesiastical as in force in the Diocese of London. In the course of the series of events by which the British territories in India grew from a group of trading settlements into an empire, various branches of jurisdiction which sprang originally from an ecclesiastical origin, have come to be applied by a number of legislative acts to new territories and new classes of persons, and administered by new tribunals. And in the progress of this development the ecclesiastical origin of such jurisdiction has been completely discarded, and the Legislanne has gradually evolved an independent system of its own. Largely suggested, no doubt, by English law, but also differing much from that law, and purporting to be a self-containe 1 system (257 8). (See Arthur Wilson.) MIRZA KURRATULAIN BAHADUR D. In trying an issue directed to it from the Equity side of the Supreme Court of Hombay in a suit instituted on that side, the common law side of that Court is merely ancillary to the Equity Court; it investigates facts and pronounces its opinion on them, merely in order to ground some further proceedings in the equity suit; the verdict itself is no proceeding in the equity suit, it only becomes so when it is adopted and acted upon in that suit. It stands on the same footing as the finding of a jury in a distinct common law Court, analogous to the case of a reference to the Master which when confirmed by the Court, and not before, is the subject of appeal. If a party objects to such a report, he must except to it, and the overruling that objection and confirming the report, opens the whole question of the propriety of the finding of the facts contained in it, to the review of the Court above ; but if there be no exception, the report is not open to such revision (178). Maintainability.

In a suit instituted in the Supreme Court of Bombay by the residuary legatees of the estate of a Hindu testator to recover their shares as such from the executors of the deceased, one of the executors pleaded a partnership between the testator and himself, and a right to retain the amount of the balance due from the testator. The Court on the common law side accordingly framed two issues and found thereon that there was a partnership and that it was deter-mined on a particular date. There was no motion for a new trial, but the court on the common law side gave leave to appeal on 2—9 –1836, on giving security, without men-tioning the time for it. The petition for leave to appeal was filed on 22—10—1836, but the security was not given until 22-11-1837

Meanwhile, on 19-11-1836, the original cause came on to be heard, on the Equity side of the Court, on the finding, upon the said issues, and for further directions, and a decree was then made directing the taking of account of the partnership. On 28-2-1837, leave was given to appeal from that decree, on condition of the amending of the petition of appeal, and stating that leave had been given on the common law side to appeal against the finding of the issues. On 23-2-1838, the order for leave to app against the finding on the issues was, however, rescinded Notwithstanding that the order for leave to appeal was so rescinded, an appeal was lodged in the Privy Council against the finding on the issues, as well as the decree of the Equity side, of 19-11-1836.

SUPREME COURT OF BOMBAY-(Confd.)

Held that the appeal, in so far as it was directed against the findings on the issues on the common law side, was incompetent, and that it must be confined to the propriety of the decree on further directions, founded on the Austria, and the evidence in the cause (179-80).

The finding on the common law side might, as a verdict, have been appealed from in an appeal against the judgment in that suit, which is founded on that verdict, the evidence, as well as the finding, being brought up as part of the proceedings, and included in the transcript. But the verdict only, prior to judgment being given, could not be appealed from in a common law suit; nor can this verdict on an issue directed from the equity side, as a determination in a common law suit (1778). If the appellant had meant to object to the findings, he should have applied to the equity side for a new trial, as a verdict against evidence and having brought all the evidence before the court, the refusal of a new trial and consequent adoption of the finding, as one of the grounds for a decree would then have been the subject of appeal (178-9). --- Charge or personal liability created by.

A person, who obtained a decree for possession, applied to be put into possession of the property in dispute, pending an appeal from the decree by the defendant. She was given possession by an order of the first court, upon her providing security to restore the mesne profits to the extent of one lakh of rupees. The security was given by three persons who executed a security bond in the following terms:—" We, the declarants, furnish security for one lakh of rupees, hypothecating the following property therefor and declare that the hypothecated property shall serve as security, and be liable to the extent of one lakh of rupees for carrying out the aforesaid purpose. Wherefore this security bond has been executed so that it may serve as an authority."

The security of five individuals tendered by a plaintiff on appeal from the Zillah Court, having been reported by the Nazir insufficient, the security-bond of an additional surety was offered, and being reported sufficient, was accepted by the Zillah Court. An appeal was lodged against the sufficiency of that new security, and the Provincial Court pronounced it insufficient. Thereupon it was referred back to the Zillah Court, with directions, that unless sufficient security was given, possession of the property in dispute should be delivered to the Collector. The Zillah Court, upon further investigation, being satisfied with the sufficiency of the additional surety, a security-bond was executed in that court by the appellant, the additional surety, aloes, the other five sureties having failed to perfect their securities.

On application after the decision in the cause, and pending an appeal to the king in council, by the appellant, to be discharged from the liability of his suretyship, on the grounds that the rejection of his security by the Provincial Court for insufficiency, thenceforth rendered his security nall and void, and that the acceptance of his security alone by the Zillah Court, without the other five sureties, was without his knowledge and consent, held, affirming this court below, that the security-bond being on record, was not avoided by the rejection by the Provincial Court on its supposed insufficiency, inasmuch as the Zillah Court had revived the same by its acceptance of the appellant as surely, and he had taken no steps to discharge his liability by having the security-bond taken off the file. The rule that a surety for the repayment of a debt is relieved of liability when the creditor by a binding contract with the principal delitor extends the time for the repayment by him of his debt, though established in English law and in ported into the Indian Contract Act, S. 135, without express mention of all the qualifications which attach to it in England, has often operated as a surprise and hardship on creditors. It has long since become a common thing, at least in England, for prudent lenders of money to prevent its application by provisions like that which is found in the document under consideration. Whether that practice has been so common in India is not apparent (177-8). (Lord Hobkouse.) HODGES v. DELHI AND LO - DON BANK, LTD. (1900) 27 I. A. 168= 23 A. 137 (146-7) = 5 C. W. N. 1= 2 Bom. L. OFFICIAL-SURETY FOR.

The Government of Bengal brought the suit out of which the appeal arose against the appellant who was surety for S, the Treasurer of Mirzapore Collectorate; and it was brought to recover a sum, with interest, of upwards of Rs, 60,000.

The case on the part of the Government was, that between the years of 1843 and 1848 the treasurer had been a party to the embezzlement of the sums of money in question.

It appeared that the surety bonds were three times renewed. The Treasurer occupied that position for a period of 8 years. The bonds were not renewed every year.—they were three times renewed, and in the other years the Government did not renew the bonds, but they made an inquiry into the sufficiency of the security. It was argued upon the part of the appellant that, by the renewal of the honds, each bond, as it was renewed, was in fact a novation, so that no action could any longer be maintained upon the old bond. but it must be taken that by an examination of the accounts the Government had satisfied themselves that no fraud or embezzlement had been committed up to that time; and that though they did not give up the old bond, yet, practically, the new bond was to be taken in lieu and satisfaction of the old bond; so that the surety only became responsible for the deficiencies which might take place subsequently to the giving of the new bond. If that defence was correct, the consequence would be that there would be a defence to all except any deficiencies which might be proved subsequently to the giving of the last bond.

Held that the defence could not be maintained (87).

The defence rests entirely upon this, that we are to infer that each new bond was given in substitution for the old one. It is not suggested that until the year 1848, when the discovery was made by one of the parties in the office making a statement to the Government, the Government had any suspicion whatever that any frauds were going on. The old bonds were never given up. The surety did not ask for the old bonds. There is nothing to shew that he had any idea that he was discharged, or that he had a right to the old bonds. There is nothing to show that the Government intended to give up or abandon any claim that they had upon any of the bonds (88).

Semble if the Government had known that frauds had been committed during the time that the old bond was in existence, that would raise a totally different question, for then, of course, they ought to have warned the surety, and not allowed him to go on by giving a new bond (88). The suit was brought by the Government of Bengal against the appellant, who was a surety for S the Treasarer of the Mirzapore Collectorate; and it was brought to recover a sum, with interest, of upwards of Rs. 60,000. The case on the part of the Government was that between the years 1843 and 1848 the treasurer had been a party to the embezzlement of the sums of money in question.

It appeared that the surety bonds were three times renewed. The treasurer occupied that position for a period of 8 years. The bonds were not renewed every year,-they were three times renewed, and in other years the Government did not renew the bonds, but they made an inquiry into the sufficiency of the security. It was argued on the part of the appellant that the Government having satisfied themselves, by their Collector, and by the examination which they made of the accounts, that no fraud had been committed, and that the accounts were correct, the new bonds were given upon the faith of the accounts being correct, and that they were to be estopped from saying that the accounts were incorrect.

Held, there was no ground for that argument (89.)

There must be such gross negligence as almost to amount to a participation in the fraud, before the fact of the Government examining into the accounts and not discovering the frauds sooner could operate as a discharge. ject of having securities is, that if secret embezzlements take place, the Government may have a security upon which they can rely (89). Evidence of embezzlement in-Depositions ex parte of official-Admissibility.

The suit was brought on the part of the Government of Bengal against the appellant, who was a surety for S, the Treasurer of the Mirzapore Collectorate, to recover a sum of money, with interest. The case on the part of the Government was, that between the years 1843 and 1848 the Treasurer had been a party to the embezzlement of the sums of money in question.

When the alleged frauds were in the first instance discovered, the first thing which was done was that the Collector went down to examine into the matter, and to examine everybody, including S himself, who could give any information upon the subject, to find out what the truth of the matter really was, and he took their depositions, S had died before the trial of the suit, and so could not be examined in the suit. But he had been frequently examined before; first he had been examined by the Collector, and subsequently he had been examined by the Magistrate, and then afterwards he was tried and found guilty; and subsequently an action being brought, he was examined again, and then alleged that he was innocent.

Held the evidence of S ought not necessarily to be entirely rejected,—it probably would not be satisfactory to support a case upon an admission made by him alone, if the other evidence was not sufficient to amount to strong evidence against him; but if there is strong evidence against him, then probably the examinations (at any rate the examinations minations before the Collector) might be referred for the

In a suit by the plaintiffs to recover possession of plots of jungle lands on the ground that they appertained to their Zemindary, the main defence was based on the allegation that the lands in dispute formed part of the defendant's taluk, and not of the plaintiffs' zemindary. Relying solely upon a declaration entered in the index to the thakhust map, the Sub-Judge gave a decree to the plaintiffs. He was of opinion that the said declaration was an official act to which no exception had been taken on behalf of the defendant, and might therefore be presumed to have been correctly made. The High Court, on the other hand, considered that the entry in the statement attached to the thukhust map was made ex parte, and without any inquiry. They accordingly held that the plaintiffs had failed to discharge the onus that lay on them and reversed the decree of the Sub-Judge.

Held that, as the entry on which the decree of the Sub-Judge rested was made on an exparte statement of the plaintiffs' agent which was immediately contradicted on behalf of the defendant, the decision of the High Court was correct. The talugs in which the lands in suit were said to have been included were, no doubt, settled at the Decennial Settlement, and that settlement was in due course made permanent. There was evidence to shew that, in assessing the taluns, thum assets were taken into account. There were, in the original official papers, circumstances favourable to one side and circumstances favourable to the other, but no confident conclusion could be drawn from those papers either one way or the other. The Thakbust maps were equally inconclusive. As regards possession and enjoyment of the lands in question on the part of the plaintiff and those who preceded him, the evidence shewed that from as early as 1837 the appellant's predecessors in title received kabuliyats from persons carrying on jhum cultivation on the lands in question; that in 1842 and 1843 those predecessors in title succeeded in defeating an attempt to exercise rights over those lands on the part of the persons interested in an adjoining mouza; and that on several occasions in subsequent years the appellant's predecessors successfully resisted proposals on the part of revenue officers of Government to settle portions of those hill lands as ilam lands open for

Held that, though the plaintiff had failed to establish a title by adverse possession for 60 years, the evidence of possession and enjoyment adduced by him was important as proof of title, and that Regulation III of 1891 did not apply to the case. ## TALABI BRAHMOTTAR GRANT.

- Nature of .

A Talabi Brahmottar grant is defined in Wilson's Glossary as " Land granted rent-free to Brahmins for their support and that of their descendants, as a reward for their sanctity of living or to enable them to devote themselves to religious duties and education ". If after the words " rent-free " be added the words " or at a fixed rent", this statement may be accepted as an accurate description of the origin of the grant, but in itself it contains no definition of the characteristies of the tenure. TANK.

Village tank-Repair of.

Exclusive right of some of villagers-Right to exclude other villagers from contributing towards rest of repair-Proof of -Quantum.

The plaintiffs and defendants were all inhabitants of a village, and the subject of dispute was a tank belonging to that village. The plaintiffs claimed in their plaint to be hereditary hukdars, that is, rightful owners, of the tank, and they prayed for a declaration that they had the sole right to repair it at their own exclusive cost, and for other relief flowing from that right and from the defendant's interference with it.

The plaintiffs did not assert that they were owners of the tank in any full or proper sense of the word; they admitted that the villagers at large had full right to the enjoyment of it; but they contended that the function of cleaning, repairing, and generally managing and protecting the tank was an hereditary possession of their family, which they had a right to retain so long as they hore the cost of it.

Held, on the evidence, affirming the High Court, that the tank was the common property of the village, and that no class of the villagers had any right to exclude the rest from contributing to the repairs, (Lord Hobbouse.) SIVARAMAN (1888) 16 I.A. 48 -CHETTI D. MUTHIA CHETTI.

-S. 10-Imported sugar-Contract for sale of-Tariff valuation of such sugar-Reduction of, after date of centract-Rights of parties on.

The tariff values and their taxation are totally different from the duties and their levying. The former is matter of intelligent anticipation, based upon such knowledge of price variations as is available. When the tariff value is thus anti-ipated, and contracts are made, then, when the dety is not changed, these contracts take stock of the position with complete accuracy and there is no occasion in reason for any subsequent re-adjustment as between buyer and seller. But "duties" are in a different position. Their rate remains the subject of Government and administrative action. The parties who make forward contracts are not appraised of such changes, but have to wait for Budget announcements. It is in this latter case that the Indian Tariff Act comes in to declare that a change in the duty by decrease, the duty having been imposed between the making of the contract and the delivery of the goods, may be the ground of a claim by the buyer.

A change of duty means a change in the rate of duty. Where there has been no change whatsoever in the rate of duty, the contention that a change of tariff values of sugar is constructively a change in the sugar duty is without justifi cation, (Lard Sham.) PROBHUDAS p. GANIDADA.

-Direct or indirect tax-Coal producers-Gross to venues of-Tax on.

The Mine Owners Tax Act, 1923, of the Province of Alberta, imposed upon mine owners as therein defined a percentage tax upon the gross revenues of their coal mines. The question for decision was whether the lax in question was or was not a direct tax.

The respondent company was a mine owner within the definition of that term contained in the Act in question.

They refused to pay the tax.

Held, affirming the Court below, that the tax in question was not a direct tax.

It is not disputed that, though the tax is called a tax on "gross revenue," such gross revenue is in reality the Appende of sums received from sales of coal, and is indislinguishable from a tax upon every sum received from the sale of coal. The respondents are producers of coal, a commodity, the subject of commercial transactions. The general tendency of a tax upon the sums received from the sale of the commodity which they produce and in which they deal is that they would seek to recover it in the price charged to a purchaser. Under particular circumstances the recovery of the tax may, it is true, he economically undestrable or practically impossible, but the general tenency of the tax remains. (Lord Warrington of Clyffe.) In a suit brought under Act X of 1859 for the enhancement of the rent of lands within plaintiff's zemindary, the history of the defendant's occupation of the suit lands showed that at the commencement of the suit the lands had been held as against the Zemindar at one unvarying rent since 1792, under a tenure originating in a pottah of that year, but treated de facto as an hereditary tenure and from time to time, described by both the semindar and the tenants as a mocurrary tenure; and, that, as such, it had been made the subject of sale and transfer, to the knowledge and with the assent of the zemindar, who on one occasion bid, through his manager, for a portion of it.

Held that evidence of the above kind supplied the want of the words "from generation to generation" in the pottah, which was the foundation of that title (466).

The facts afford incontestable proof that ever since the death of the grantee under the pottah, the hereditary character of this sub-tenure has been recognissed by the successive zemindars. There is also evidence, which is not contradicted, that some of them have recognised its transferable nature. This evidence affords ample grounds for inferring either that the tenure was always intended to be hereditary, although not so expressed in the pottah, or that, if the original grant were limited to the life of the grantee. his tenure has by some subsequent grant become hereditary and transferable. And, upon the proof here given of long and uninterrupted enjoyment, accompanied by the recognition of its hereditary and transferable character, it is almost impossible to suppose that suit by the zemindar in the Civil Court to disturb the possession of the respondents, could not be successfully resisted (465.6).

Semble from the evidence of the subsequent acts and conduct of the zemindar's recognising the grantee under the pottab and his successors as mocurrareedars a court or jury might legitimately infer, as against the first remindar and his successors, either that the rent had been always fixed, or that by subsequent contract, that which had been originally variable had been made invariable (466). #### TENANCY AT WILL OR.

-Evidence.

In all cases in which a tenancy at will is alleged on one side and a permanent tenure is alleged on the other, the question is whether the true inference from the facts is that the tenure is permanent or precarious. The onus of proof is on the tenant.

In a suit for ejectment of the defendants on the ground that they were tenants at will, held that the defendants established their case of permanent tenure by evidence of, inter alia, various transmissions of a heritable title since 1804 and plaintiff's acceptance of an unaltered rent not withstanding the increased value of the land. -Lease-Construction of.

The plaintiff was the lessee of the suit land under a muttawalli of an Imambara. He sued the defendant in ejectment, alleging that the latter was merely a tenant at will. The question was whether the defendant was a mere tenant at will or whether his tenure was a permanent tenure.

The defendant founded his title upon a series of transactions dealing with the tenure by sale and mortgage which ment as far hock as 1826, each transmission purporting to be of a permanent inheritable right, and upon the continuous possession of his predecessors in title at an unaltered rent. The plaintiff alleged that the transmissions relied upon by the defendant were not recognised by the plaintiff's predecessors in title, and were not binding upon him. The plaintiff also relied on a kabuliyat granted to the defendant by the Muttawalli in 1830 as being the origin of the defendant's holding.

Held that the kabuliyat of 1830 was not the creation of a fresh holding, but a recognition of an already existing right over which the Muttawalli had no control, and that the defendant had made out his case by proof of an uninterrupted payment of an unchanged rent. (Lord Robertson.)

A Putni Taluk is a permanent, heritable and transferable tenure, which the Zemindar may create over the whole or part of his estate, whilst the Putni Talukdar has a similar right to let the entire property held by him in putni or in parcels to Subordinate Talukdars called durputnidars. And this process of sub infeudation may, so far as the law is concerned, be carried down to several lower degrees. In the case of these tenures the Zemindar has a right to apply to the Collector to put up the putni taluk to sale for arrears of rent and the sale has the effect of cancelling all under tenures; but the subordinate tenure holders have the right to deposit in the Collector's court the arrears of rent, and to be put in possession of the defaulting superior tenure for the satisfaction of the deposit made by them. The same right which the Zemindar possesses for the realization of his rent, with the correlative right on the part of the subordinate tenure holders of saving the superior tenure from sale, is given to them in succession. The Putni Regulation is a self-contained Act embodying the rules relative to the rights of semindars and putni Talukdars and the legislature in enacting the Bengal Tenancy Act excluded in express terms from the operation of the Act the special legislation relating to putal tenures. In this case the Government claims a right to increase the assessment on one who holds under an ancient and permanent tenure by reason of a default not arising from himself or any person holding his share but arising from his cosharers in respect of shares held by them separately. This is not a common incident of tenure, and is not involved in the right to hold the whole lands as hypothecated for the whole rent, though shares are held in severally and subject to several assessments. It, therefore, lies on the Government to prove by what authority this increase in the amount of the rent has been made (111.) (Lord Justice Giffard.)

Even now the words "raja", "zamindari" "patta", and "istimrari mukurrari" are not so stricty used as always to bear a precise meaning or to refer invariably to cases in which nothing is due but an annual Government jama for an absolute estate in lands. There is even less ground for so holding when the documents under construction are nearly 150 years old. No authority is forthcoming to show that a holding on the terms of both yielding a jama and rendering a quasi-military service may not be consistent with the use of these words. Whether the service tenure is made a term or not, the holder might be a "Zemindar" or landholder and his holding be "perpetual" and "on fixed terms-" The position of the holder depends not on his being styled "raja" and "zemindari," which are general expressions of consideration, but upon the conditions upon which he holds the land (54). NATURE AND INCIDENTS OF.

Permanent Settlement-Effect of.

Neither the origin of a jaghire nor the precise time at which it was created was known, but it appeared that as far back as 1771, the villages of which it was composed were held by jaghirdars who paid to Government two-thirds of the annual value thereof as revenue, and retained the other one-third as remuneration for the services under which the jaghire was held. The villages included in the jaghire were permanently settled as part of the zemindary of Pachete, of which the appellant was the zemindar. In fixing the Government revenue at the time of the decennial settlement, the lands included in the jaghire were assessed at the two-thirds then payable by the jahirdar to the Government, and the one-third retained by the jagirdar in lien of services formed no part of the assets of the zemindary in respect of which the Government revenue was fixed.

It was contended, on behalf of the appellant, that, as the | SURVEY PROCEEDINGS-THAK KHASRA lands were included in his permanently settled zemindary, the services as well as the rent belonged to him; that the services were private services, and that he had a right to cause the lands to be sold in execution of his decree.

Held, that the permanent settlement of the lands did not alter the nature of the jaghire or of the tenure upon which the lands were held, nor could it convert the sevices which were public into private services under the zemindar (121).

The Zemindar became entitled only to the rent or revenue which was previously payable to the Government and in respect of which he was assessed, and not to the services in respect of which the one-third of the rent or revenue was allowed to the tenant as compensation for the services. -Grantor's power of Personal employment-Tenure created distinct from-Tenure-holder ready and willing

Where a tenure is created as distinct from mere personal employment, the tenure-holder has such an interest in the rendering of the services as entitles him to such benefit of the tenure as accrues from his readiness and willingness to perform his obligation. The service is not a mere burden on the land; it constitutes a personal right in so far as the land held on that condition is concerned, and a personal obligation in so far as concerns the grantor, which, being in the nature of a public obligation, cannot be waived by the grantor for his own advantage, nor, being in the nature of a title to the lands, can be relegated to desuctude for the mere disadvantage of the ghatwal. The truth is that, where rights can once be shown to have been established and continue to be vested in living persons, obsolescence and desuetude are popular expressions rather than solid legal grounds for refusing a continuing recognition to the right as originally established. No doubt the holders of thanadari land stand in a certain position contiguous to the Zemindar. If the lands are resumed, they are to be settled with the zemindar, and it may be that they may even be described as settled with the zemindar in a certain sense and that there is a sort of superiority in the zemindar which might entitle him to the surface of the land in case of escheat. Whether this would give him a claim to the minerals is a further que-tion. It is, however, a mistake to say that thanadari lands, though made resumable, were not always resumed (119). The property was in the possession of the tenants. Each party derived his title from a lady, S, who in the year 1858 was the undoubted owner. The defendant's claim was under a hiba or deed of gift executed by S in 1858. The plaintiff's claim was under transfers executed by her between 1880 and 1890. The plaintiff alleged that the hiba under which the defen dant claimed was a benami transaction.

Held that in such a suit the plaintiff could only succeed by the strength of his own title and could not depend upon the failure of the defendant to prove his title (230). (Link Hobbonse.) NIRMAL CHUNDER BONNERJEE v. MAHO-(1898) 25 LA. 295= MED SIDDICK. 26 C. 11 (18) = 7 Sar. 383

In a suit for a declaration of title to certain lands, and for ejectment of the defendants therefrom, the plaintiffs at the trial proved a clear title to the lands for over 50 years by a succession of duly registered conveyances, mortgages, re conveyances, and other title-deeds, and also proved that during that period they leased portions of the lands by leases that themselves were registered. They also proved that they had not been dispossessed by the defendants until a period well within the period of limitation, and that therefore the Statute of Limitations did not apply. The trial Judge found in favour of the plaintiffs on all points and decreed the suit. On appeal, the High Court ignored entirely the clear title to the land which the plaintiffs had proved, and expressly held that they came into court without title deeds. They therefore treated the case as though it was one in which the Court had nothing relevant before them but the conduct of the parties to decide which of them was entitled to the land, and reversed the decree of the Court below. On further appeal to their Lordships, held that the High Court erred in so treating the case, and in not considering the real questions in the case in consequence. They accordingly set aside the decision of the High Court and restored that of the Court of first instance. (Lord Moulton.) JOHN KING & CO., LTD. v. MUNICIPAL COM-(1914) 18 C. W. ——Genuineness of —Possession proceedings—Non-production in—Presumption from.

As against the genuineness of these sunuds, it was strongly urged that they were never produced or mentioned by the appellants (who relied upon them) on several occasions on which, it is said, if they had really been in existence at that time, they ought to have been produced, and certainly would have been produced.

It is said that a litigation went on from 1833 to 1840 with respect to the possession of these lands, and that in the course of that suit no allusion was made to these documents. But the answer given to this objection much diminishes its force, viz., that the question then before the Court was not one of title but of possession, and that it was only on the question of title, as to which the court had no power in that suit to pronounce any decision, that the production of the original sunuds was of importance (175-6). It is far more reasonable to suppose that if the plaintifs had been the true proprietors of the estate, they would, in accordance with native habits, have kept their title deeds in the recesses of the Zenana, and would not have entrusted them to a mere manager. Toda garas Auks had their origin in arbitrary exactions made by strong and powerful persons, who obtained the hame of Garaslas, upon the village communities; those arbitrary exactions were in some way commuted into fixed Payments by the villagers, in consideration of which the tratia's gave up their claim to make arbitrary exactions, and also undertook to defend the villagers against the exactions of others. The nature of these huks has been tended as M.I.A. 1 defined in two cases decided by this Board. 8 M.I.A. 1 and L.R. 1 I.A. 46. Origin, nature and incidents and classes of-Nature and incidents at present day.

These annua! payments (toda garas huks), although originally exacted by the Girasias from the village communities in certain territories in the west of India by violence and wrong, and in the nature of blackmail, had, when those territories fell under British rule, acquired by long usage a quasi-legal character as customary annual payments; as such they were recognised by the British Government, which took upon itself the payment of such of them as were previously payable by villages paying revenue, and left the liability to pay such of them as were payable by inam villages to fall on the inamdar. And since the decision in 8 M.I.A. 1, it cannot be questioned that the toda giras hugs of the former class constitute a recognised species of property capable of alienation, and of seizure and sale under an execution. Quacre how far that decision may govern the rights of an inamdar (46-7).

within the strict sense of that term (51)

It appears that the Girasias were sometimes Mahomedans, and therefore that the hoq may in its inception have been held by a Mahomedan. It is certain that, as these huks now exist, they may pass to, and he held and enjoyed by, Mahomedans, Parsees, or Christians (52).

Whatever may have been the origin of the hug, it must be assumed to be now a right to receive an annual payment which has a legal foundation, and of which the enjoyment is hereditary; and the liability to make the payment is not personal, but one which attaches to the inamdar into whose soever hands the village may pass; or, in other words, that the huk is payable by the inamdar virtute tenuror. The interest of the bukdar does possess the qualities both of immobility and of indefinite duration, in a degree which, if the question depended on English law, would entitle it to the character of a freehold interest in or issuing out of real property (53). TORT.

--- Act prima facie innocent and rightful when becomes

An act which, prima facie, would appear to be innocent and rightful, may become tortuous if it invades the right of third persons. A familiar instance is, the erection on one's own land of anything which obstructs the light of a neighbour's house: frime facts, it is lawful to erect what one pleases on one's own land; but if by twenty years' enjoyment, the neighbour has acquired the right to the unobstructed transmission of the light across that land, the erection of any building which substantially obstructs it, is an invasion of the right, and so not only does damage, but is unlawful and injurious (132). (Dr. Lushington.) ROGERS r. RAJENDRO DUTT. (1860) 8 M. I. A. 103 = 13 Moo. P. C. 209 = 3 L. T. 160 = 9 W. R. 149 (Eng.) = 2 W. R. 51-1 Suth. 413-1 Sar. 755.

The foundation of every action of tort, apart from the question of malice, is an act wrongful, and which may be It is essential to an qualified legally as an injury (131). action in tort that the act complained of should, under the circumstances, be legally wrongful as regards the party complaining; that is, it must prejudicially affect him in some legal right; merely that it will, however directly, do him harm in his interests, is not enough. Cases are of daily occurrence in which the lawful exercise of a right operates to the detriment of another, necessarily and directly without being actionable (135-6). (Dr. Lushington.) ROGERS v. (1860) 8 M. I. A. 103= RAJENDRO DUTT. 13 Moo. P. C. 209 = 3 L. T. 160 = 9 W. R. 149 (Eng.) = 2 W. R. 51=1 Suth. 413=1 Sar. 755.

- Damages for-Special damage-Claim to-Failure to prove-Ordinary damager-Recovery of-Right of.

The principle ordinarily applied to actions of test is, that the plaintiff is never precluded from recovering ordinary damages by reason of his failing to prove the special damage he has laid, unless the special damage is the gist of the action. Thus in an action of slander for words actionable for se, when the plaintiff lays special damages, and fails to prove it, he is nevertheless entitled to such damages as the fury think right to give him. It would be otherwise if the words were not actionable for se (574-5). (Sir James IV. Coltile.) MUDHUN MOHUN DOSS p. GOKUL DOSS

In the case of damage occasioned by a wrongful act, that Is, an act which the law esteems an injury, malice is not a necessary ingredient to the maintenance of the action; an imprisonment of the person, a battery, a trespass on land are instances, and only instances, in which the act may be quite innocent, even laudable, as to the intention of the doer, and yet, if any damage, even in legal contemplation. be the consequence, an action will lie (131). A person interfered with in his lawful enjoyment of his own property is entitled to rid himself of that unlawful interference by lawful means without thereby affecting his right to hold the wrong-doers liable for that which they have thus caused him to do.

It is not open to the wrongdoer to prescribe by which of two alternatives the injured man shall put a stop to the wrong under which he is suffering. His choice of any one alternative does not make it as between him and the wrongdoer a voluntary act or estop him from claiming that it was done under coercion.

There is nothing in the Indian Statute law which precludes the application of this principle to a person whose property has been wrongfully attached. (Lord Moulton.) SETH KANHAYA LAL v. NATIONAL BANK OF INDIA, (1913) 40 I. A. 56 (63-4) = 40 C. 598 (609-10) =

-Wrong committed abroad-Action in England in respect of - Maintainability-Conditions.

The action in the present case is a Common law action for tort; and it is well established that in order to found such an action in this country for a wrong alleged to have been committed abroad, two conditions must be fulfilled. First, the wrong must be of such a character that it would have been actionable if committed in England. Secondly, the act must not have been justifiable by the law of the place where it was done (211). (Viscount Caty.) HAROLD EATON McMillan r. Canadian Northern Ry. Co. (1922) 33 M. L. T. 209 (P. C.)

Wrong committed in one country-Damages for-Suit for, in another country-Maintainability-Condi-

By the well-known rule of law laid down by Willes, J., in Phillips v. Eyre, an action will not lie in one country or province for a wrong committed in another unless two conditions are fulfilled. First, the wrong must be of such a character that it would have been actionable if committed in the country of the forum; and, secondly, it must not have been justifiable by the law of the country where it was done (208).

Quaere as to the precise meaning of the term "justifiable" as used by Mr. Justice Willes (208).

The term must, at all events, have reference to legal justification and an act or neglect which is neither action able nor punishable cannot be said to be otherwise than justifiable within the meaning of the rule (208). ### TRADE-MARK.

-Business of manufacturer-Transfer of, as a going concern-Transferee's rights under-Trademark or trade name of original business-Use of -Representation that goods are those of original business-Right of.

TRADE-MARK-(Contd.)

The appellant carried on business in Antwerp. There, in 1882, he founded a limited Company under the name of "El Oriente Fabrica de Tobacos Sociedad Anonima". He designed there trade-marks and trade names. All these three names and marks were registered not only at Antwerp but in various parts of the world. The Company continued trading until 1905, when it went into voluntary liquidation.

In 1905 the appellant formed under Belgian law an association of which he was appointed sole 'gerant." Thereupon the business of the old Company, including its registered trade-marks in Belgium and in every other country.

The appellant had before this time established at Manila a Cigar factory, at first for the old Company and later for himself. In the end of 1908 he established a second factory at Hongkong.

In 1917 the United States Trading with the Enemy Act became law. Under that Act the American Asien Property Custodian took possession of the appellant's factory and business in Manila apparently in the belief that he had continued to be a German, and sold it to a firm. including in the sale all the stock and the goodwill trade name and trademarks of the "El Oriente Fabrica de Tobacos, C. Ingenobl." The American Trading with the Enemy Act provided that the sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim or title to any property taken or seized by the Custodian was to be limited to the proceeds received therefrom and held by the Custodian.

Held the assignment by the Costodian, although confined, so far as property was concerned, to property within the Phillippine Islands, not the less purported to include the business as a going concern and the goodwill, trade name and trade-marks thereof, of the appellant's Company doing business in the Phillippine Islands under the name of "El Oriente Fabrica de Tobacos, C. Ingenobl."

This assignment could not transfer the title to trade-marks or trade names in China, but it could enable the transferee Company as between themselves and the appellant, to say that they were not passing off goods under a trade name to which they had no title, so long as they abstanced from representing the goods as those of Ingenohl himself. The transferees may have the right to make use of the names and marks in question, so long as they are descriptive of a kind and quality of sugar. But it does not follow that they have any right to represent the cigars as those guaranteed by the appellant or to print his signature astating this. (Viscount Haldane.) INGENOHL P. WING ON & CO. Importer-Reputation as-Right to-Goods of tame mark-Passing off by competitors of, as being imported by him-Action in respect of-Right of.

It is possible for an importer to get a valuable reputation for himself and his wares by his care in selection or his precautions as to transit and storage, or because his local character is such that the article acquires a value by his testimony to its genuineness; and if, therefore, goods, though of the same make, are passed off by competitors as being imported by him, he will have a right of action.

There is nothing to prevent a tradesman acquiring goods from a manufacturer and selling them in competition with him, even in a country into which hitherto the manufacturer or his agent had been the sole importer.

The ordinary principles of jurisprudence with regard to trade marks and those forbidding the passing off of goods apply to India. (Lord Phillimere.) IMPERIAL TOBACCO COMPANY OF INDIA, LTD. v. An action for breach of trade-mark does not lie at the instance of the manufacturer who supplies articles when another firm carries on the actual business with the articles samplied.

The plaintiffs were a milling company who dealt largely in Indian cloths, and who, in connection with the sale of that Indian cloth, used certain trade-marks. In several of those trade-marks, either in conjunction or alone, the lotus flower was the leading figure. They instituted a passing-off action against the defendants, also manufacturers of cotton piecegosals, complaining that, in using a trade-mark bearing a latus desice, they were able successfully to palm off their goods as those manufactured by the plaintiffs

Held that there was no cut and dried role which could be laid down by a Court of law for the estimation of damagein such a case, and that a fair test to work on would be to take the figure which showed the falling off in the plaintiffs' trade which came in after the pirated mark was introduced on the market by the defendants, and to add something thereto for a possible increase of trade. ### TRANSFER OF PROPERTY ACT (IV OF 1882).

Ss. 1. 123, 129-Extension of Art-Power of Local General under S. 1-Extension of S. 123 without extending S. 129 of Act-Legality of.

In 1914 a Mahomedan conveyed immoveable property in the Pegu District. Burma, to his wife by a registered deed. The learned Judge held that, at the date of the deed, in that part of Burma transfer of possession was not necessary to perfect the gift, because the Local Government, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon them by S. 1 of the Transfer of Property Act, as amended, to extend "the whole or any part of the Act." had only extended S. 123 in that part of the Act and had not extended S. 129 thereof.

The power to extend any part of the Act to Hurma did not authorize the Local Government to extend particular sections of the Act, so as to give those sections a different operation from that which they had in the Act itself read as a whole, and to abrogate in the area to which the extension applied a rule of Mahomedan law till then in force there, as to which the Legislature had expressly provided that it was to remain unaffected by the Act (28). The conveyances to the plaintiffs' ancestor, L, were made in 1883 and 1894. The deed of 1883 contains no words of exception or reservation, and is ample in point of language to pass all the transferor's interest in the zemindary, including the land on which the bazaar was situate. His interest in the houses on that land and in the profit rents derived from them would pass by the deed in the absence of words showing an intention to retain them (75).

The share of S was sold under the decree of the Court, and the sale certificate shews that all his interest in the property mortgaged by him was sold to the plaintiffs. The description in the certificate is again quite sufficient to poss his interest in the bazaar in the absence of any words shewing an intention to exclude it (76). (Lord Lindley.) Ostensible owner-Holding out of a person as +5% dence of-Mahomedan sisters-Helding out by, of brother as ostensible owner.

The sister, and the representatives of another deceased sister of S, a Mahomedan, claimed against him and his transferees shares in the suit property as having descended from their mother according to the rules of Mahomedan Law. The mother died in 1907, and soon after her death possession was taken of her entire estate on behalf of her son S by the Court of Wards. A year after the Court of Wards released the estate to S, and the suit by the claimants aforesaid was instituted only about 7 years later. Both the sisters had husbands who were well aware of the state of the family and of the descent of the property and of such claims as they might have to share in the succession. The sisters, and after the death of one of them, her reporsentatives were receiving allowances from the Court of Wards such as are usually made to junior branches when the estate vests in one heir. They were not also entirely ignorant of the way in which S was encumbering the estate.

Held that the above-mentioned facts satisfied the first condition of S. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act. and that S must be deemed to have been allowed to be the ostensible owner of the property with the implied consent of the Plaintiffs. Ostentible owner-Transfer by-Validity against real owner-Conditions.

C died having sold the suit property to his wife. On her death, C's nephew took possession of the property and executed a mortgage in respect of it for repayment of a decree debt due by her for which the property had been attached during her lifetime. Subsequently, the Raja of Basti, claiming to be entitled to the suit property, among others, by virtue of a sapradnama executed by C, and a mil executed by C's widow, obtained a decree for possession of the suit property, and recovered possession in execution of that decree. The question arose whether the mortgages from Cr nephew was entitled to enforce the mortgage against the Raja of Basti, the real owner of the property.

The High Court held, reversing the Sub-Judge, that under the proviso to S. 41 of the Transfer of Property Act, the mortgagee, not having acted in good faith after taking resonable care to ascertain that his transferor had power to make the transfer, could not claim to be a boma fide transfirse without notice so as to be in a position to defeat the -Nature of -Operation of -Circumstances preventing. The principle of law, which is sometimes referred to as feeding the grant by estoppel, is well established in this country (England). If a man who has no title whatever to property grants it by a conveyance which in form would carry the legal estate, and he subsequently acquires an interest sufficient to satisfy the grant, the estate instantly passes. In such a case there is nothing on which the second grant could operate in prejudice to the first (254).

There may be statutory provisions or provisions of native law which would prevent the operation of the doctrine; for the law of conveyance in England depends on special and complicated considerations (254). Pending proceedings by S in execution of a money decree which he held against B, in which proceedings S claimed to set off against the amount of his decree the amount of a decree for mesne profits which B held against him, the respondent attached B's right to mesne profits under the said decree in execution of a decree for money which the respondent held against B. Subsequent to the respondent's attachment the matter in dispute between S and B was settled by a consent order, to which the respondent was not a party, by which B's decree for mesne profits was set off pro tanto against S's decree against him.

the mortgagors having been disallowed, M instituted a suit and obtained a decree declaring that the said property belonged to him and was not liable to be attached and sold inexecution of A's decree. To that suit A's heirs, A being then dead, and the mortgagors were parties. Meanwhile the property had been brought to sale in execution of A's decree and had been purchased by one Moti, who was not made a party to M's suit. M's heirs disturbed the possession of Moti whereupon he (Moti) obtained an order removing that obstruction. Thereupon M's representatives sued Moti for a declaration that the execution sale in favour of Moti was invalid and ineffectual as against M and that .If was the person really entitled to the property.

Held that, Moti's purchase having been made during the pendency of M's suit, it was affected by the doctrine of lis fendens and that the fact that Al's suit was after the attachment in execution of the mortgage decree in As favour did not affect the applicability of the doctrine. (Lord

FOUNDATION OF DOCTRINE OF LIS PENDENS.

The doctrine of lis pendens, with which S. 52 of the Act of 1882 is concerned, is not, as Turner, L.J. observed, founded upon any of the peculiar tenets of a Court of Equity as to implied or constructive notice. It is...a doctrine common to the courts both of law and of equity, and rests... upon this foundation, that it would plainly be impossible that any action or suit could be brought to a successful termination if alienations fendent lite were permitted to prevail." The correct mode of stating the doctrine, as Lord Cranworth. L. C. observed in the same case, is that "pendente lite neither party to the liligation can alienate the property in dispute so as to affect his opponent." (Lord Mocnaghten.) FAIVAZ HUSAIN KHAN v. new foreclosure, the ground being, that if that were permitted, proceedings in a foreclosure suit would be endless, because every day a fresh alienation might be made in some part of the proceedings. But that was simply a foreclosure suit and the subsequent mortgagee would be barred from instituting any new suit in the Court of Chancery for the purpose of enforcing the equity of redemption. That case simply decides, that subsequent mortgagees of an equity of redemption are bound by a foreclosure suit (109). (Lord Junice James.) ANUNDO MOVEE DOSSEE : DHONEN-DRO CHUNDER MOOKERJEE. In October, 1865, plaintiff advanced money to .1 oc mortgage of his estate. At what date the stimre was effected under that fieri facists did not appear. but the mortgaged property was sold in execution in July. 1867 and purchased by one K. In the meantime, before the sale in July, 1867, and in the month of June, 1867. plaintiff had instituted a soit in the ordinary form for the realization of his mortgage by foreclosure or sale. The High Court thought that, if A' had not been made a party to the mortgage suit, he would not be bound by the decree therein, and that his right of redemption of the plaintiff's mortgage would remain unaffected. Their Lord-hipdoubted whether the High Court were right in their limitation of the doctrine of lis pendens (178.9). (Lord Hol-Auge.) NILAKANT BANERJI P. SURESH CHUNDER MULLICK. (1885) 12 I. M, the proprietor of an estate, granted it in putni to the father of the defendant, and afterwards mortgaged her proprietary interest to him (the father of the defendant).

After the putni lease and the mortgage in favour of the father of the defendant, a creditor of M soed for his deld. got a decree, attached the same estate, and sold it in April. 1872; and under that sale the plaintiff became the purchaser. But in the meantime the father of the defendant had been enforcing his charge against M, and he got a decree, and in the month of May, 1872, a sale took place under his decree, and he himself purchased at the sale.

Held, that as the suit of the defendant's father to enforce his charge was pending at the time of the sale to the plaintiff, the plaintiff was bound by the proceedings against M. By his purchase, the plaintiff got M's proprietary rights subject to the putni, and subject to the charge in favour of defendant's father. Now: f M herself had retrained the owner of the proprietary interest she would be clearly excluded by the sale to defendant's father (in execution of his decree) from all interest in the property. It is equally clear that the plaintiff must be excluded, he having purchased only the right, title, and interest of M, unless he can shew that after the purchase in April, 1872, he was not bound by the proceedings in the suit of the defendant's father. In a suit brought against the trustees under a trust-deed for the construction of the deed, for the ascertainment of the respective rights of the parties interested thereunder, and for directions as to the administration of the trust, a decree, dated 31-8-1885, was made by which it was declared interalia that R, one of the beneficiaries, was entitled to a onesixth share of the surplus income of properties which included a particular house and after other declarations and directions it was ordered that the trustees should retain their costs of suit out of the trust properties. Thereupon, and while further proceedings in the suit were still pending R mortgaged his one-sixth share on 27-3-1886. On 10-3-1887, a further order was made in the suit for sale of the house aforesaid, and other properties, in order to raise the money for payment of the trustees costs payable under the decree of 31-8-1885. The sale was duly held, and pursuant to the order of the court, the trustees excruted a conveyance accordingly on 2-8-1890.

Hdd, that the mortgagee from R took subject to the sale which was subsequently ordered, and the mortgage could not prevail against the conveyance of 1890 or encumber the

R could only mortgage such interest as he took under the deed as declared by a competent Court and the interest declared in the interim decree of 1885 was subject to further orders and directions to be given by the Court in further proceedings in the same suit to provide for payment of the costs of the suit itself. - Decree in-Firm of - Concellation of deed of transfor-Profridy.

The purchaser of property in execution of a decree obtained against a such for steclaration that a deed of trust executed by A charging the property purchased by the plaintiff with payments of debts alleged to be due by A was void because the deed was executed with intent to defraud and delay creditors. The Court below, finding that the deed was executed with the intent alleged, made a decree declaring the deed to be fraudelent and void as against the plaintiff, and ordering it to be cancelled.

Held, that the decree, in point of form, went too far in providing for the cancellation of the deed.

The plaintiff in the suit not being interested to cancel the deed as a whole, but being interested only to remove the deed out of the way of the assertion of his own rights in regard to the property which he has purchased, their Lordships think that the portion of the decree which retains the deed for cancellation should be omitted (344). France of Parties-Refresentative suit-Necesity. The following passages (at p. 15 of the report in 32 L A. 1) in their Lordships' judgment have been cometimes relied upon as authority for the view that a suit to set aside a fraudulent transfer under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act must be a representative proceeding :- "No issue was stated in this suit whether the transfers were or were not liable to be set aside at the instance of Dhunpet under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, and no decree has been made for setting them aside. Such an issue could be raised and such a decree could be made only in a suit properly constituted for that purpose, and this suit was not so constituted either as to parties or otherwise. Their Lordships do not express and have not formed any opinion whether the transfers or any of them could have been avoided in a properly constituted suit." On examination, however, the case will be found to be authority for no such view (see the explanation of this case given in 31 M.L.J. Journal Portion. pp. 23-25). (Lord Davey.) CHUTTERPUT SINGH r. -Right of, against property transferred-Mode of enforcing.

When a stranger is in possession of property of a deceased testator under fraudulent and sham deeds executed by the iestator, a creditor of such testator, who has obtained a decree, should, in order to recover his decree-debt from that property by setting aside the said deeds to the extent of his claim, bring his suit, when resisted in execution-proceedings, against that stranger. Instead of so doing, if he obtains a personal decree against the residuary legatee of the testator as if the debt was a debt personally due from the legatee, and puts the property to sale, the auction-purchaser cannot subsequently sue the stranger for possession of the property, on the ground of the deeds being fraudulent and without consideration, as the legatee, whose right, title and interest. he has purchased, is as much a volunteer as the stranger (524). -Consideration-Transfer for good, but in fraud of creditors.

In this case the Judicial Committee affirmed the decision of the High Court which set aside two assignments on the ground that they, though for good consideration, were made to defeat creditors, and held that no valid proceedings could be based on either of them.

The question whether any of the parties rould establish rights based, not on the assignments, but on other grounds, such as the actual payment of debts, was not before the courts below, and their Lordships did not accordingly pronounce any opinion upon it. -Creditors-Preference of one of-Transfer seeuring.

In a case in which no consideration of the law of bankruptcy or insolvency applies there is nothing to prevent a debtor paying one creditor in full and leaving others unpaid although the result may be that the rest of his assets will be insufficient to provide for the payment of the rest of his debts. The law is rightly stated by Palles, C. B., in In re Mroney where he says: " The right of the creditors, taken as a whole, is that all the property of the debtor should be applied in payment of demands' of them, or some of them without any portion of it being parted without consideration or reserved or retained by the debtor to their prejudice. Now it follows from this, that security given by a debtor to one creditor upon a portion of or upon all his property (although the effect of it, or even the interest of the debtor in making it may be to defeat an expected execution of another creditor) is not a fraud within the statute; because notwithstanding such an act, the entire property remains available to the creditors or some or one of them, and as the statute gives no right to rateable distribution, the right of the creditors by such act is not invaded or affected (106.7)

Held that the transfer in the case was one in which the debtor had preferred one creditor to the detriment of another, but that that in itself was no ground for impeaching it under S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act even, if the debtor was intending to defeat an anticipated execution by the plaintiff (107). C. 343 = 30 M. L. J. 116.

-The transfer which defeats or delays creditors is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another, but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor. The debtor must not retain a benefit for himself. He may pay one creditor and leave another unpaid. So soon as it is found that the transfer here impeached was made for adequate consideration in satisfaction of genuine debts, and without reservation of any benefit to the debtor, it follows that no ground for impeaching it lies in the fact that the plaintiff who was also a crecitor was a loser by payment being made to this preferred creditor-there being in the case no question of bankruptcy (107). (Lord Wrenbury.) MUSAHAR SAHU v. HAKIM LAL. (1916) 43 I.A. 104 = 43 C. 521 = 19 M.L.T. 203 = (1916) 1 M. W. N. 198=3 L.W. 207=14 A. L. J. 198= 20 C. W. N. 393 = 23 C.L.J. 406 = 18 Bom. L. The fact that a judgment-debtor prefers a creditor of his, with whom he is connected by family ties, and effects a transfer of his property to that person in lieu of his debt with the set purpose of defeating an execution by another creditor, will not stamp the transaction as a fraudulent transfer. A debtor, for all that is contained in S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act, may pay his debts in any order he pleases, and prefer any creditor he chooses. (Sir Lawrence Jenkins.) A debtor is entitled to prefer a creditor, unless the transaction can be challenged in bankruptcy, and such a preference cannot in itself be impeached as falling within S. 53 of the Transfer of Property Act. The transfer, which defeats or delays creditors within the meaning of that section is not an instrument which prefers one creditor to another, but an instrument which removes property from the creditors to the benefit of the debtor.

The first two defendants (mortgagors under a mortgage which was a combination of a simple mortgage and an usufructuary mortgage) have failed to discharges their obligation of making over possession to be mortgagee and have thereby deprived the mortgagee of part of his security and in these circumstances their Lordships are of opinion that under S. 68 of the Transfer of Property Act the money has become payable and the mortgagee is entitled to a money decree for the same, but if the money has become payable under S. 68, their Lordships are further of opinion that under S. 67 a decree for sale can be made. It would indeed be a startling result of the legislation if in such a case as this here a default has been made by the mortgagors of a kind which materially affects the mortgagee's security there existed no remedy for the immediate enforcement of the mortgage. Their Lordships are not prepared to dissent from Mr. Haldane's contention on this point, but it is really unnecessary for them to express any judicial opinion on it in the present case (245). Their Lordships cannot accept the argument that the words of S. 80 of the Transfer of Property Act "in the case mentioned in S. 79" mean mortgages to secure further advances or the balance of a running account. They think that the words of S. 79 mean that the mortgage there referred to must express a maximum. The words "to secure further advances, etc.," denominate the different classes of mortgages, but to bring them under S. 79 they must have the common feature of a maximum expressed. The exception in S. 80 is inapplicable to a case in which no maximum was expressed. (Lord Dunedin.) IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA D. U RAI GYAW THU & CO.

On 8-11- 1906, the owner of properties K and M mortgaged them both to Mongul. On 19-5-1914, property A was sold to S, the ancestor of the respondents, a portion of the purchase price being left with S to enable him to discharge the mortgage of 8-11-1906, and other debts of the vendor, including certain debts for which creditors had already obtained decrees and had attached the properties In July 1914, property M was sold to the appellants in execution of a decree obtained by Kishin, a creditor of the mortgagor before 19-5-1914. S having failed to pay off Mongul's mortgage and the other debts of the mortgagor out of the money left with him for that purpose, Mongul took in 1918 proceedings to enforce his mortgage by the sale of both properties, and, in execution of the decree obtained by him, both properties were sold in August 1921. S then died, and his representatives, the respondents. sued to compel from the appellants as owners of property .M contribution towards the amount which S had applied in paying off Mongul's mortgage.

Held, that the provisions of S, 82 of the Transfer of Property Act applied to the case and that the appellants

The appellants were not parties to the contract between S and the mortgagor for the application of the money, and the benefit of the contract had not in any way passed to them. S. 95 of Transfer of Property Act ought not to be so strictly construed as to limit its operation to mortgages under which possession passes, and, therefore, on redemption properly repasses. The section must be construed distributively so as to make the condition of obtaining possession apply only to the cases in which its fulfilment is from the nature of the mortgage possible, and in other cases to make the charge follow upon redemption. In July, 1881, plaintiff's predecessor in title executed a usufructuary mortgage of a village to respondents, on the terms that the mortgagor was to have no power of redeniption for a period of 15 years, and that after that he was to pay off the entire morigage money. The respondents entered into possession, in the ordinary course, of the village.

In November, 1881, plaintiff's predecessor executed a further document which recited that he had executed a possessory mortgage deed in respect of the whole village, and that he needed a further specified sum, which he had borrowed, and he then stipulated to repay the entire amount of the debt, principal and interest in a lump sum Within the period stipulated in the former mortgage deed, namely, within 15 years, and he recited that he had borrowed the money by way of a further debt with interest at a certain rate. The deed then provided: 'I shall first pay up this debt, including principal and interest, and thereafter I can redeem the mortgaged village, having paid up the mortgage money. Without the payment of this debt I cannot redeem the mortgaged village." It then provided that he should pay every year the interest on the amount, and if he did not, then he would execute separate bonds each year, bearing interest at the same rate.

When the deed of November, 1881, is looked at, it seems clear that the parties intended that the original village should remain in the possession of the mortgagees until the second debt was paid off, and intended, therefore, that the property should be security for the debt. was contended for the appellant that, as the grantor had before registration adopted the appellant as his son, the latter's rights in the family property had intervened so as to invalidate the gift.

Held, overruling the contention, that the gift was valid against the appellant.

The provision of S. 123 of the Transfer of Property Act cannot be reconciled with S. 47 of the Registration Act, except upon the view that, while registration is a necessary solemnity in order to the enforcement of a gift of immoveable property, it does not suspend the gift until registration actually takes place. When the instrument of gift has been handed by the donor to the donee and accepted by him, the former has done everything in his power to complete the donation and to make it effective. Registration does not depend upon his consent, but is the act of an officer appointed by law for the purpose, who, if the deed is executed by or on behalf of the donor and is attested by at least two witnesses, must register it if it is presented by a person having the necessary interest within the prescribed period. #### TREATY.

-See UNDER INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

Action of-Plea of "Net guilty"- Jurisdiction of Court-Objection to, if included in plea-Facts ousting jurisdiction not appearing in plaintiff's case-Facts appearing therein-Distinction.

In an action of trespass brought against the appellants (the Collector of Revenue at Bombay and one of his assistants) for distraining for arrears of Government "quit-rent" the appellants pleaded "Not guilty" only, and did not specifically raise the plea that the Supreme Court at Bombay had no jurisdiction to try the case because it related to a matter concerning the revenue of India, and was exempt from the jurisdiction of that Court. The question was whether the defendants, by pleading "Not guilty" admitted the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, and waived all objection thereto, and whether it was therefore not competent to them to take the objection at the trial.

Held that under the plea of "Not guilty" the Court was bound to admit the objection to jurisdiction (371-2).

It appears from the Books of Practice cited, that it has been usual to plead such a defence in the Indian Courts, and, certainly, the convenient course would be to put it on the record. The issue joined, seems simply to be whether the alleged trespasses were committed by the defendants, and it is urged, that the necessity for a special plea is rendered more argent by the new rules introduced at Bombay, which provide, that in actions of trespass, under the plea of "Not guilty", no defence shall be given in evidence which confesses and avoids. However, looking at the statutes and charters under which this Court is constitutest, and to the cases, in point, which have been decided in Westminister Hall, we have come to the conclusion, that the Court, under the plea of "Not guilty," was bound to admit the objection (371-2).

We are not prepared to say, how it might have been, if, when the plaintiff's case was closed, nothing more had appeared, than that the defendants had entered his house at Bombay, and carried away his lamp. Possibly, under the plea of "Not guilty," the defendants might not have been at liberty to adduce evidence which went in confession and avoidance, and the facts ousting of its jurisdiction might never have been judicially before the Judge. But the plaintiff himself, proved the controversy respecting his liability for the arrears of the quit, rent, the demand made upon him for the arrears, and the warrant to levy them by distress; therefore, supposing upon these facts, the Court had no jurisdiction to try the cause, was the Court to try it, and give judgment for the plaintiff, because the defendants had omitted to plead specially? (375). The facts ousting the jurisdiction having been brought judicially to the notice of the Judge, and with perfect regularity, he usurps a jurisdiction which does not belong to him, if he proceeds and gives judgment for the plaintiff. Therefore, these facts coming out for the first time, on the trial of an issue, he ought either to have directed a nonsuit or a verdict to be entered for the defendants. (376, 378). (Lord Campbell.) #### TRANSACTION AMOUNTING TO A

-Buyer and seller-Agreement between, for payment by buyer to local temple of sum allowed as rebate by seller-Trust not created by-Suit by temple for recovery of amount from buyer-Not maintainable.

The plaintiff in the suit was the managing proprietor of a temple in Broach. In that capacity he claimed to be entitled to a lago, or perquisite or tax of two annas per bale on all cotton bought in and exported from Broach. The lago in question was found to be a cess or tax on a trade, within the meaning of Act XIX of 1844 (Bombay), and to be therefore incapable of being enforced in a court of law. It was contended for the plaintiff that nevertheless such a payment was not thereby made illegal, and it was argued that, by virtue of something loosely described as standing", the buyers of cotton in Broach had come under some sort of obligation in the nature of a trust which made them liable as trustees or agents to the claim of the plaintiff.

It appeared to have been the practice for the native cultivators selling cotton in Broach to allow a walthar or rebate of one rupee for every candy or two bales. That walthar was no doubt originally intended to meet or cover certain charges or allowances of which the Mandir's lago was one; and it was said on behalf of the plaintiff that the native cultivators would naturally be disposed to take that burthen on themselves because they were interested in maintaining the worship of the temple of which the plaintiff was the managing proprietor. From those premises it was argued that the plaintiff was entitled to enforce his claim directly against the cotton buyers as his trustees, or as having received moneys for his use, for which they were accountable to him.

Held, that there was nothing whatever in the nature of a trust to be found in the transaction or to be inferred from

TRUST- (Contd.)

Creation of-(Contd.)

TRANSACTION AMOUNTING TO A-(Contd.)

There is not the slightest evidence that the respondents accepted the position of trusteee for the plaintiff, or consented to receive moneys for his use. The cutton sellers may or may not have a valid claim against the cotton buyers in respect of so much of the walthar as may be attributable to or connected with the lago, but such claim, if valid, cannot give any right to the representatives of the plaintiff (who died pending the appeal) against persons who undertook no oldigation towards the plaintiff (107). It was urged that such dedications of property without the assent of the State, should be regarded as merely revocable appropriations, which the founders might vary the use. ### Persons not entitled to benefit of-Exclusion of.

-Trustee's duty as to-Failure by him to exclude-Injunction restraining those persons from sharing benefit -Suit by beneficiaries for-Right of-Trustee not made

When property is set apart for public or charitable uses, it will be a malversation to apply any of the funds for persons who are not objects of the trust. Those who are objects of the trust must have all the benefits they require; and if there is a surplus, it must be left to the Courts to make a cy-pres application of it. But when the subjectmatter of such a trust or charity is the rendering of some convenience or service of such a nature that it will not hart the lawful recipients if others share with them, it cannot be held that the trustees are bound to exclude persons who have no legal title to share. They may do so; they may treat all such persons as trespassers and say. 'Sic Velo sic juhen stel pro ratione voluntas. But if they choose to admit them, this of itself furnishes no ground of complaint. If the members admitted are too large or the persons are disorderly or unpleasant in their habits or in any way substantially interfere with the benefit or convenience of these for whom the endowment was created, the trustees may be required to exclude them. But the mere claim of A that B shall not share in such a benefit because B is not within the terms of the foundation is not one that courts would encourage (54-5).

Certain members of the Parsi Community sued for an injunction restraining a non-racial Parsi convert to the Zoroastrian faith from using the Fire Temple at Rangoon or attending its ceremonies. The plaintiffs did not seek for a general declaration as to the persons who were objects of the trust. They did not seek for a construction of the Scheme, or for any order to be made upon the trustee, nor TRUST-(Contd.)

declaration that the defendant was not entitled to the use and benefits of the Parsi Fire Temple, and for an injunction as stated above. They failed to make out that the defendant was not a Zoroastrian. Their claim to the injunction was not what might be called a quasi-caste claim. Their claim to the injunction was put forward on the grounds that the result of defendants' presence in the Temple would be the wounding of religious feelings and the descration of the Temple. The latter ground was found to be not tenable.

In a suit under S. 92 of C. P. C. of 1908 relating to a chattiram (also called a choultry), the case of the plaintiffs was that the chattiram was a public charity, which had been founded and dedicated to the public more than 60 years before suit as a charitable institution for the convience of travellers as a halting place and for the feeding of poor Brahmins resorting to it, while the case of the defendants was that the chattiram was a private chattiram and that it had never been dedicated to the public. The Courts below concurrently found that the chattiram was a public trust, and their Lordships also found that the chattiram was a public trust (Sir John Edge.) VAIDYANATHA AYYAR v. If there was any surplus in the hands of the trustee for the benefit of the judgment-debtor it would not entitle the judgment-creditor to attach and sell the whole or any specific portion of the corpus of the estate. He could, under S. 266 of C.P.C. of 1882, only attach that property over which the judgment-debtor had a disposing power, which he might exercise for his own benefit, "whether the same was held in the name of the judgment-debtor, or by another person in trust for him." R., as the manager of a Joint Hindu Family carrying on money-lending business, executed a power of attorney in favour of one S, his agent at Pegu, on 10-2-1906, authorising him among other things to use the name of K. P. R. to sell or exchange immoveable property at Pegu to which K. P. R. was or should thereafter become possessed or entitled. The K. P. R. Firm was in a critical condition in 1908 and therefore a trust deed was executed in April, 1908, by K. P. R. in his own behalf and as the head of the joint family to one V. M. S., by which "all the properties, assets and interests mentioned in Schedules A & B" were transferred to him in trust to collect all debts owing to the family and to pay all creditors. Schedule B included the firm under the mark of K. P. at Pegu and all the rights such as money-lending, etc. Among other powers of management, the power of appointing agents was also one. But a clause in the deed limited the power of the trustee to sell immoveable properties only on the consent in writing of a co-adjutor appointed under the deed of trust. The co-adjutor appointed died in 1911 and in 1912 in 1912 purporting to act under the trust deed, V. M. S.,

The properties at Pegu were brought to sale in Court auction and the Appellant brought them and they were duly conveyed to him by sale deeds dated 8-5-1920 and 7-10-1921, executed by the Official Receiver. In a suit to recover possession of the properties from M, who held under the sale deed executed by S, held, that the power of attorney executed to S by K.P.R. in 1906 was not cancelled by the subsequent trust deed as the property claimed in the suit could not be said to be covered by the description of the properties in the Schedules to the trust deed; and that the power-of-attorney given by V. SALE OF, FOR PECUNIARY ADVANTAGE OF TRUSTEE.

——Custom sanctioning—Validity.

If the custom set up was one to sanction not merely the transfer of a trusteeship, Lut, as in this case the sale of a trusteeship for the pecuniary advantage of the trustee, their Lordships would be disposed to hold that that circumstance alone would justify a decision that the custom was bad in law (85). In a case in which the question was as to the validity of a transfer by the trustee of a pagoda of his office and its duties, it was contended that in India, and particularly in that part of India in which the pagoda in question was situated, custom sanctioning such a transfer must prevail against the general law.

Nature of, to be proved - Custom of particular institution - General custom.

In a case in which the question was as to the validity of a transfer by the trustee of a pagoda of his office and its duties, it was said that in India, and particularly in that part of India in which the pagoda in question was situated, custom sanctioning such a transfer must prevail against the general law.

Their Lordships had grave doubts whether any such general custom could, in such cases, be set up and proved in that way. Their Lordships "conceive that when, owing to the absence of documentary or other direct evidence of the nature of the foundation and the rights, duties and powers of the trustees, it becomes necessary to refer to usage, the custom to be proved must be one which regulates the particular institution "(83.) -Validity of.

Though by the common law of India a trustee has no power to transfer his trusteeship, a well-proved and established custom sanctioning such a transfer will prevail against the general law (83.) (Sir James W. Colvile.) RAJAH VURMAH VALIA v. RAVI VURMAH MUTHA.

(1876) 4 I. A. 76=1 M. 235 (250) = 3 Sar. 687 = 3 Suth. 382.

TRANSFER OF-VALIDITY OF.

--- Common law of India.

The plaintiff, called the Cherakel Rajah, claimed to be the assignee of the uraima right, or right of management, of the Tracharamana pagoda and its subordinate chetroms, under an assignment from the persons known as the urallers of that religious foundation. The question was whether the urallers were legally competent to transfer their uraima right.

It was admitted that according to the constitution of the institution the urallers for the time being were to be the karnavans or chief members of four different tarwads. It was, therefore, presumably the intention of the founder that the uraima right should be exercised by four persons representing four distinct families.

Held that the urallers had no power under what may be termed the common law of India to transfer their uraima right to the plaintiff (83.)

The first question is, whether, independently of custom, persons holding such a trust are capable of transferring it at their own will. No authority has been laid before their Lordships to establish this proposition; principle and reason seem to be strongly opposed to such a power, and particularly to such an exercise of it as has taken place in this instance. The unknown founder may be supposed to have established this species of corporation with the distinct object of securing the due performance of the worship and the due administration of the property by the instrumentality and at the discretion of four persons capable of deliberating and bound to deliberate together; he may also have considered it essential that those four persons should be the heads of particular families resident in a particular district, open to the public opinion of that district, and having that sort of family interest in the maintenance of this religious worTRUST-(Contd.)

ship, which would insure its due performance. It seems very unreasonable to suppose that the founder of such a corporation ever intended to empower the four trustees of his creation at their mere will to transfer their office and its duties, with all the property of the trust, to a single individual who might act according to his sole discretion, and might have no connection with the families from which the trustees were to be taken (80-1.) -Bencheiaries sai juris-Purchase with-Validity

A trustee for sale cannot purchase; he cannot purchase because the same person cannot be both vendor and purchaser, and he who acts for another cannot also act for himself. But even if he be not a trustee for sale, if in any capacity he is trustee of the estate, although his incapacity to buy is not absolute and is subject to different limitations, it is equally well established. A trustee may indeed acquire from beneficiaries who are mi juris an estate in which they are interested, but he can only do this if he has made the fullest disclosure to them of all the relevant and material facts within his knowledge affecting or that might affect the value and condition of the estate and the parties are at arm's length the cestus que trust knowing that he is dealing with the trustee. Otherwise the purchase is bad, and it is had because any person who occupies a fiduciary relationship may be able by virtue of his position to acquire information with regard to the trust estate which he is not permitted to use for his own benefit. ## ULAVADAI MIRASIDAR.

Meaning of Decision of case rested on Propriety.

The Judges of the High Court translate the words "ulavadai mirasidars" as "persons with an hereditary right to cultivate"; but the Subordinate Judge says that, although the meaning of the words taken separately is clear enough, "the meaning of both the words put together is not explained," nor does the combination find a place in Wilson's Glossary. The words do not appear to have a well-established meaning. It would be extremely unsatisfactory to rest the decision in a case of importance on a vernacular expression of doubtful signification. advantage over the person with whom he is in confidentia.

S. 32 (2)—Entry in register under, and not in lity are embodied in S. 88 of the Indian Trusts Act. That clause (e)—Dispute as to—Decision of Board on—Privy Act does not apply to the part of India with which there is Council appeal from—Right of.

The first respondent, a thikadar registered under the United Provinces Land Revenue Act, 1901, purported to transfer his thika or lease to the second and third respondents. The second and third respondents then applied for mutation of names. On notice of that application being given to the appellant as the superior proprietor, he objected that the thika had been forfeited by the transfer, that the transferees were at most more tenants, and that they were not entitled to be entered either as thikadars or as matahatdars. The Assistant Collector upheld that contention and directed the second and third respondents to be registered as tenants. The first respondent thereupon sued the second and third respondents in the Civil Court and obtained a decree by consent declaring that his gift to them was incomplete and that no title passed. He then appealed to the Deputy Commissioner, who ordered the second and third respondents to be registered as thikadars. That order, on appeal by the appellant, was reversed by the Commissioner, who restored the order of the Assistant Collector. On appeal by the first respondent from that order of the Commissioner, the Board of Revenue, after making the second and third respondents parties in the appeal to it, held that the transfer in their favour was invalid and directed that the name of the first re-pondent should again be entered as thikadar. On appeal to His Majesty in Council from that order of the Board of Revenue, held that the appellant had no right of appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The dispute was about an entry in the register mentioned under cl. (a) and not under cl. (c) of S. 32 of the Land Revenue Act, and disputes about entries in register maintained under cl. (a) are to be decided, not in accordance with the provisions of S. 42, but in accordance with the provisions of S. 40 of the Act, which does not make any of the provisions of the C.P.C. applicable.

All the Collector could do besides amending the register after the summary inquiry under S. 40 of the Act was to put the successful party into possession, and his order could not debar the unsuccessful party from asserting his rights by suit in a Civil Court. Hence there is no provision of law making the summary inquiry under S. 40 subject to the C.P.C. so as to render the order made by the Board of Revenue in such an inquiry appealable to His Majesty in Council, (Sir John Wallis.) Evidence-Admissibility in-Value of-(Contd.)

A wajib-ul-arz is a village administration paper, prepared by a village official, in which are recorded the statements of persons possessing interests in the village relative to existing rights and customs. As such they are of considerable value in the determination of such rights and customs. But statements which merely narrate traditions and purport to give the history of devolution in certain families not even of the narrators stand in no better position than any other tradition (282), (Mr. Ameer Ali.) -Khesont of Village-Eridentiary value of.

Records of that character (the wajib-ul-arz and the Khewat of a village) take their place as part of the evidence in a case. They do no more. Their importance may vary with circumstances and it is not any part of the law of India that they are by themselves conclusive evidence of the facts which they purport to record. It may turn out that they are in accord with the general bulk of evidence in the case; they may supply gaps in it; and they may, in short, form a not un-important part of the testimony as to fact which is available. But to give them any higher weight than that might open the way for much injustice, and afford temptation to the manipulation of records, or even of the materials for the first entry (69), (Lord Shase.) There is no class of evidence that is more likely to vary in value according to circumstances than that of the Wajibul-arges.

Where, from internal evidence it seemed probable that the entries recorded in Wajib-ul-arzes connoted the views of individuals as to the practice that they would wish to see prevailing rather than the ascertained fact of a well-established custom, held that the appellate Courts in India, in holding that the custom was not proved, properly attached weight to the fact that no evidence at all was forthcoming of any instance in which the custom sought to be established had been observed. Unambiguous entry-Correctness of-Presumption. Settlement officers in recording customs in Wajib-ularzes have to perform duties which the Government orders them to perform. One of these duties was to record customs as the Settlement Officer found them, and not as he might think they ought to be. When it is not shown by reliable evidence that the Settlement Officer neglected to perform his duty or was misled in recording a custom, and it does not appear that the statement of the custom is ambiguous, the record in a Wajib-al-are of a custom is most valuable evidence of the custom; much more reliable evidence than subsequent oral evidence given after a dispute as to the custom has arisen. Widow of sharer dying without male issue—Gift of decoased's share by, to daughter or daughter's son to as to defeat right of brother or nephew of decoased—Right of— Descendants—Children if expland to.

The rule of inheritance is that if a sharer has children by two lawfully married wives-that is, one child by one wife and several by the other-the children by both the wives shall get equal shares, that is, one child will get possession over one half, and several children over the other half. If one wife have children, and the other be childless, both of them will hold possession of equal shares for their lifetime; after the death of the childless wife, the children of the other wife will hold possession in equal shares, If there be no male child, and any sharer or his wife make a gift of his or her share during his or her life time to his or her daughter or daughter's son, and puts her or him in possession of the same, they will remain in possession. If there remain no descendants of any sharer's son or daughter, his brothers or nephews descended from the same ancestor shall take possession of the share. A non-married wife, or children by her, shall not get anything except maintenance."

Held, affirming the courts below, that, on the right construction of the wajib-ul arz, a sharer in Hindu family property or his wife could in the absence of male issue give his or her share absolutely to his or her daughter or daughter's son, and thereby defeat the preferential right of the brother's sons of the sharer.

The intention appears to be to modify the Mitakshara law which prevails in Oudh by enabling a sharer in family property or his wife to after the course of succession by introducing a daughter or daughter's son, and their descendants male or female, in preference to brothers or nephews of the sharer. There is no reason for limiting the meaning of "descendants" to children, as where they are intended that word is used, and where a male is intended it is so said. It is also apparent from the provision that the brothers and nephews are to take if there remain no descendants of a son or daughter, that the gift by the wife must be of more than the interest she would take as a widow and is not, as the appellants contended, limited to that interest (46.7.) Regulation VII of 1822, by which tortibul arres were directed to be made, was passed at the time of the introduction of a regular settlement of the land revenue into "the ceded and conquered Provinces," under which designation the districts afterwards known as "the North-Western Provinces" were at that time included. The object of the Government appears to have been to obtain a body of reliable contemporary evidence, upon matters which might afterwards come into controversy not only between the landholders and the Government, but between rival claimants to estates.

Regulation VII of 1822 was repealed, as regards the North-Western Provinces, by Act No. XIX of 1873 and it is to be observed that this Act, while providing, in the 62nd and following sections, for the maintenance of a careful "record of rights," in each mahal, no longer included a record of "local usages connected with land tenures" among the particulars to be entered. It was probably considered that, during the fifty years which had elapsed between the passing of the Regulation and the Act, such usages had been sufficiently ascertained, and that it was desirable that reference should be made to the earlier records when the existence of any such usage was asserted. In later years, at any rate, attempts have been made by some proprietors to use these records as an indirect means of giving effect to their wishes with regard to the nature of their tenure, or the mode of devolution of their property after their death. When this has been the case, these records are "worse than useless, they are absolutely misleading." (Sir Andrew Scoble.) MUSSAMMAT LALI v. MURLI DHAR.

Before Reg. Ss, 19 and 20 of that Regulation continued in force until they were repealed by Bombay Act III of 1874, but the repeal did not make valid any alienation of service watan lands which had been prohibited by Reg. XVI of 1827. S. 5 of Bombay Act III of 1874 was passed, as was S. 20 of Reg. XVI of 1827, in the interests of the State and not in the interests of the watandars.

On September 15, 1865, K made a mortgage of the watan to the father of the respondents, who obtained possession of the property on August 31, 1875, and was in possession in November, 1877, when K died. On August 16, 1887, the appellant, who had by that time been recognised as the watandar, sued the respondents (their father having died in the interval) for a declaration that the mortgage of the villages was not binding after the death of K, and for possession.

Held that, assuming that the appellant was barred by limitation from recovering the lands as heir of his father from those claiming under K, and consequently his title as watandar from his own birth was extinguished, yet as the lands remained watan, and K was watandar de facto with all the rights and subject to all the restrictions incident to that tenure, she could not make any alienation which would be valid against her own heir whether that heir were the appellant or another, and there was nothing to preclude the appellant from asserting his title as heir of K.

The argument to the contrary seems to give greater right to possession as watandar by wrong or usurpation than would be enjoyed by a rightful watandar. (Lord Darry.)

Plaintiff and defendant were adjoining owners. There had existed in the defendant's estate for a long time a large reservoir, called M. Ta'l, formed by artificial embarkments, and fed partly by water brought from a natural river by artificial channels, and partly by the collection of the rainfall on the adjoining land. The reservoir was undoubtedly created for irrigation purposes. A large Khonwa (overflowing channel) had been cut on the eastern side of that Ta'l by which, and by other channels, water from this ta'l had flowed to another and lower ta'l constructed at the northern extremity of the defendant's mouzah, and mainly upon it, called C Ta'l, from which last ta'l the water was carried by several channels to the plaintiff's adjoining and other estates for the purpose of irrigating them. That system of irrigation existed beyond living memory. The plaintiff claimed as a right subject to the defendant's right to use the water of the M ta'l for irrigating his mouzah, that the overflow water of the ta'l and the surplus water, after irrigating the defendant's mouzah, should be allowed to flow in the accustomed manner to his mouzah.

WATERCOURSE-(Centd.)

The M ta'l was of a permanent nature. The construction of the C ta'l indicated that a permanent and connected system of irrigation for what were at the date of suit the plaintiff's and defendant's mouzahs beneficial to both those estates, was by those means provided. The fact that that lower reservoir, which seemed to have acquired the name of the C Ta'l was built mainly upon the defendant's mouzah, led irresistibly to the conclusion that it was constructed by, or with the consent of, the then owner of that moarah, and it was evident from its situation, that the main, if not only, use was to store water for the convenient irrigation of the plaintiff's mouzahs, Then it was proved that the water had been used and enjoyed for irrigating those mouzahs from a time beyond living memory.

Held that, from all the facts of the case, a presumption fairly arose that that enjoyment had an origin which conferred a right (40); and that the plaintiff had established a right to have the overflow water of the M Ta'l discharged into the Khonwa, so that it might flow through it towards the C Ta'l; and also a right to the flow of the surplus water towards the ta'l as theretofore (43).

Held, however, that plaintiff's whole right was subject to the right of the defendant to irrigate the lands of mouzah M, and to take by proper channels and other proper means so much of the water as might be proper and requisite for such purpose (43).

It may be that at the time when this system of irrigation was adopted the mouzahs now belonging to the plaintiff and the defendant formed one estate, and, if so, on severance, the right to the continued flow of the water in the accustomed channel would arise and subsist; or, if the mouzahs were always separate, it may be that, by the construction of the M Ta'l, water was intercepted which would naturally have flowed to mouzah C, and that this or some other consideration existed, which led to an agreement between the proprietors respecting the use of the water (40-1).

It is not inconsistent with the plaintiff's claim that the power of fixing the time for letting off the overflow from the M Ta'l should reside with the defendant. The necessity for this operation would obviously occur in the rainy seasons, and it is apparant upon the evidence that in these seasons a considerable quantity of water is let off, which runs down to the C reservoir, and is stored there (43).

Decree to be passed in such a case. (Sir Montague E. Smith). RAMESHUR PERSHAD NARAIN SINGH v. (1878) 6 I.A. 33 = 4 C. 633 (641-2, 643-4)=3 Sar. 856

Possibly 50 or 60 years—certainly more than 20 years—before suit, the plaintiff's ancestors and predecessors in estate had constructed and used a pyne, or artificial water-course, on the defendant's land, making compensation to them. The pyne, by a channel at one part of its course, contributed to the water in a Ta'l or reservoir, belonging to the defendants, and by a channel at another part took the water which overflowed from the ta'l after the defendants had used as much of the water therein as they required.

Artificial Watercourse-(Contd.)

The detendants, without authority, obstructed the flow of water along the pync in several places. In a suit brought by the plaintiff to establish his right to the #ywc or artificial watercourse, and also to the ta'l or reservoir, and the water flowing from them to his estate, and to obtain the removal of the said obstructions of the defendants, held that, upon the facts of the case, there ought to be presumed the existence of a grant at some distant period of time.

This being an artificial pywe, constructed on the land of another at the distant period found by the Courts, and enjoyed ever since or at least down to the time of olistructions complained of by the plaintiff and his ancestors, any Court which had to deal with the subject might, and indeed, ought to, refer such a long enjoyment to a legal origin, and, under the circumstances which have been insiicated, to presume a grant or an agreement between those who were owners of the plaintiff's mehal and the defendant's land by which the right was created. That being so, the plaintiff does not require the aid of the statute; and his right, therefore, is not in any degree interfered with by the provision in S. 27 of the Limitation Act of 1871 (247). The appellant, the principal legatee under an alleged will of one N, applied for letters of administration with the will annexed. The 1st respondent, the widow of N, opposed the application on the ground that the will set up was a

Their Lordships affirmed the High Court, which had decided against the genuineness of the will, relying upon the following main points:-(1) that the appellant's story as to the manner, time and place at which the will came into his possession was false; (2) that the conduct of the parties in relation to certain enhancement suits was inconsistent with the alleged will having been in existence at that time; (3) that a certain letter written by the widow, the 1st respondent, was inconsistent with any knowledge on her part of the alleged will, it being admitted that, if there was a will, she must have known of it; (4) that the evidence of the witnesses to the alleged will could not be relied upon, having regard to the many material matters upon which such evidence appeared to be false. ## WILLS ACT XXV OF 1838,

-8. 7-Acknowledgment of attestation by one winness

C made his last will in writing, and signed it, in the presence of N, who also subscribed it in his presence.

WILLS ACT XXV OF 1838-(Contd.)

Another witness, G, was brought, some hours after, to the apartment in which the testator was, and signed it, after hearing t'acknowledge his subscription, and N, his fellow witness, also acknowledged his subscription. Moreover, both C and A were present when G subscribed. The question was, whether or not the subscription of the two witnesses was so made, as to comply with the requisition in S. 7 of the Indian Wills Act of 1838, the signature of N being not made but only acknowledged in G's presence.

Held, affirming the court below, that the requirements of the Act had not been sufficiently complied with (402).

In the present case the testator has acknowledged before two witnesses, present at the same time. Then must the witnesses who subscribe be present at the same time? We think the words admit of no other construction, for it is and such witnesses shall subscribe." Now this forms one sentence, with the preceding words, "present at the same time," and "such" must plainly be read,—such present witnesses, or such witnesses so being present at the same time, "Such" describes not merely the names of the witnesses, but all that is previously enacted respecting them. One quality of these witnesses is their being present at the same time. Therefore, we cannot limit the meaning of the large word of reference, "such," to the mere names or persons of the witnesses; it must embrace what had just been said of their presence; it must mean "the witnesses, etc. present at the same time." (405). (Lord Brougham.)

-8.7-Attestation by witnesses in presence of each other-Necessity-Acknowledgment of attestation in fellowwitness's presence-Sufficiency of-

S. 7 of the Indian Wills Act XXV of 1838 enacts that no will shall be valid unless it shall be in writing, and executed in manner hereinafter mentioned (that is to say), it shall be signed at the foot or end thereof by the Testator, or by some other person in his presence and by his direction, and such signature shall be made or acknowledged by the Testator, in the presence of two or more witnesses, present at the same time, and such witnesses shall subscribe the will in the presence of the Testator, but no form of attestation shall be necessary."

The question was whether a witness acknowledging his subscription in the presence of his fellow-witness was equivalent to his signing in that fellow-witness's presence within

IIdd, that the fact that the Act expressly allowed the acknowledgment of the testator to be as good as the signature, while it said nothing of the witnesses acknowledg ing was a very strong argument against the contention that acknowledgment was equivalent to signing in both cases, for if the legislature had meant to make acknowledgment equivalent to signing in both cases, the word acknowledg ment would have been repeated in connection with the attestation. ## "Affect the provisions of another statute."

-At the time of the passing of the Contract Act of 1872, the Carriers Act of 1865, in connection with the common law of England, regulated the duties and liabilities of common carriers in India. The Carriers Act was not only not expressly repealed by the Contract Act, but it was provided by the latter Act that nothing contained in it should " affect the provisions " of the Carriers Act. Nevertheless it was contended that the Contract Act was intended to alter the law applicable to common carriers.

Their Lordships observed that it was a strong thing to say that the provisions of an Act were not affected, when the whole foundation upon which the Act rested was displaced, and almost every section assumed a different meaning, or came to have a different application (130). -With regard to the expression contained in some of the Sunnuds of the grant being to the person named, "his son, grandson, etc., from generation to generation, " it has been observed by many writers of authority on this subject, that they do not, as might be supposed, import a fixed hereditary tenure. The terms in such documents (Sunnuds) for ever, from generation to generation, or in Hindu grants while the sun and moon endure, are mere forms of expression, and were never supposed, either by the donor or receiver, to convey the durability which they imply, or any, beyond the will of the sovereign (59-60). other purposes. One of the original pensioners was K. a daughter-in-law of the king. In a suit brought after the MADHAVRAO GANPATRAO DESAIT. RAGHUNATH AGASdeath of K by the appellant, her sister and her sole heir according to Mahomedan law, the question was whether the title to the pension descended to the heirs general of A'. or whether the right to succeed was limited to heirs who were also issue.

Held, that on the true construction of the deed of trust (the terms of which are set out in the judgment) the pension was to descend by inheritance, and that the descent was to be to heirs general (140-1). -Issues-Convertible terms if-Pension-Grant of, to a person and his heirs or issue.

By a deed of the 22nd of November, 1838, Mahomed Ali, the then King of Oudh, provided pensions of stipends for the ladies of his royal family, children, and other relations, including amongst others Malka Jehan and her son

By the 3rd article of the deed it was stipulated that the pension should be paid to the several pensioners specified therein and to their heirs in perpetuity, and by the 4th article, that if any of the pensioners should die without issue, his or her pension should revert to the King of Oudh.

By article 6, it was provided that the said pensioners and after them their issue who on their decease should succeed to their respective pensions should always experience the special favour and kindness of the British Government.

Held, on a construction of the deed, it was the intention of the King that in the event of the death of any of the pensioners leaving issue his or her heirs, according to the Mahomedan law of inheritance, should receive payment of the pension in the proportions regulated by such law of inheritance (181).

In the deed, the words "heirs "" issue " are used as convertible or equivalent terms so that in that document the words "heirs" must mean heirs who are issue and "issue" must mean issue who are heirs (181). (Sir Barnes Peacock.) NAWAB SULTAN MARIAM BEGUM P. NAWAB SAHIB MIRZA. (1889) 16 I. A. 175=

"As to the immoveable property belonging to us both, the said immoveable property shall, in case of the failure of aurasa (self-begotten) male issue in either of these two lines, i.e., either for yourself or in your line of aurasa sons or in my line of aurasa sons, be put in possession of the other line, but it shall not be alienated by making adoption and the like."

There is no doubt that in some cases the words " must" or the word "shall" may be substituted for the word " may ", but that can be done only for the purpose of giving effect to the intention of the Legislature; but, in the absence of proof of such intention, the word " may " must be taken to be used in its natural, and therefore in a permissive, and not in an obligatory sense (135). Shall be lawful-Meaning ordinary of-Obligation when involved in.

No doubt the earlier part of S. 51 of the Indian Income Tax Act of 1918 does not say that the Chief Revenue Authority shall state a case, it only says that he may. And as the respondent rightly urged, "may" does not mean "shall". Neither are the words "it shall be lawful " in the section those of compulsion. Only the capacity or power is given to the authority. But when a capacity or power is given to a public authority, there may be circumstances which couple with the power a duty to exercise it. To use the language of Lord Cairns in the case of Julius v. Bishop of Oxford :

"There may be something in the nature of the thing empowered to be done, something in the object for which it is to be done, something in the conditions under which it is to be done, something in the title of the person or persons for whose benefit the power is to be exercised, which may couple the power with a duty, and make it the duty of the person in whom the power is reposed to exercise that power when called upon to do so."

In their Lordships view, always supposing that there is a serious point of law to be considered, there does lie a duty upon the Chief Revenue Authority to state a case for the opinion of the Court. Female if included.

The word "person" is ambiguous and in its original meaning would undoubtedly embrace members of either sex. No doubt in any Code where women were expressly excluded from public office the problem whether the word "persons" therein would include women would present no difficulty, but where instead of such exclusion those entitled to be summoned to or placed in public officer are described under the word "person" different considerations arise. In an Act of Parliament passed several centuries ago the word 'person' when used in connection with persons entitled to be -WORDS IN

Adverse possession.

Chukdari right — Acquisition by adverse possession of, against zemindar purchasing from Government—Evidence.

The sait was brought by the heir of a person who in the year 1861 had purchased from the Government the taluk or semindari of K, which was situated in the Soonderbuns. When the purchase was made from the Government the taluk was subject to a lease which expired in the year 1866. The plaintiff complained that, when the lease expired he became entitled in possession to the lands of the taluk, but that the defendants, being in possession of a large quantity of those lands, fraudulently kept themselves, and kept him out of, that possession. Then he prayed for possession of the lands mentioned in the Schedule to his plaint, and for a declaration of his absolute right to possession thereof, as well as for a declaration that the defendants had no sort of right thereto.

The defendants' case was that they were in possession of the land from a time long before the permanent settlement of those very lands which was effected in the year 1832 " by right of a jungleboori, chukdari, mokurrari, and mourussi title, as tenants." They stated that though the Government had obtained a decree for resumption in the year 1824, the right, which might he called for shortness the chukdari right, previously acquired by their ancestors, was in no way destroyed by that resumption decree. "On the contrary," they said, "the Government, after the passing of the decree aforesaid, made a separate jummabandi of the ryoti chukdari right to the said land, confirming our chukdari eight, and made a settlement with the zemindar as regarded the proprietary right; and the zemindar too, confirming our chukdari right, has since that settlement been receiving the rents from us as before." Therefore the claim made by the defendants was to hold the checks as distinct from, and as against, the zemindar. The question for decision was whether the zemindar had such a title to the lands as enabled them to resist the plaintiff's claim to possession.

Held, on the evidence, affirming the High Court, that the defendants, even if not in possession under a well-proved legal title, were in possession under a colour of title which might have been avoided as far back as the year 1838; and that inasmuch as no proceedings were then taken to avoid it, time had run in their favour. Where, therefore, in a suit by a Zemindar to recover possession of lands claimed to have been held by the defendants under a mokurraree grant, there was no proof that notice had been given to the plaintiff of such a tenure 12 years before the commencement of the suit, held that the High Court had rightly decided that the statute of limitation was no bar (254). ## Bhakee Birt tenure.

-Claim to, by person in possession under title to inferior right derived from semindar-Remody in case of -Possession-Quieting of claim-Suit for beth-Mara-

Supposing a claim to Bhaker Birt tenure to be groundless, the injury to the Zemindar by such a claim is not the less a wrong requiring a remedy, when it is put forward by one in possession under a title to an inferior right, derived from the Zemindar; as, for instance, by a farmer of a postion of the Zemindary. If such a claim was preferred by a person having such an interest, it would certainly be competent to the Zemindar, if the claim amounted to a repudiation or worked a forfeiture of the existing interest, to sue for restoration of possession, and the quieting of the claim al-o because the limitation of his demand to that of possession would keep alive an adverse claim, and would also multiply saits. -Interposition of-Effect on commune's rights-Rent from cultivators-Jumma from mesne proprietors-

If this tenure (Bhakee Birt tenure) be not interpresed between the Zemindar and the cultivators, the ordinary relation between him and them exists; but if it be interposed the Zemindar's general proprietary title to the collections is gone, and in lieu of it he is simply entitled to sum justima from the mesne proprietors. Such an intermediate tenure cuts off the possession, that is, the Zemindar's title to the tents and profits immediately derived from the cultivators

If the Bhakee Birt be valid, the Zemindar has no title to possession in the sense in which he uses that term. He might have a right to rent for a time on the footing of contract, or estoppel even from a Birt tenant if the latter accepted a lease, but that would rest on special grounds, and would not flow from his general proprietary title. Until this claim to a Birt tenure, therefore, be removed, the Zemindar cannot have the "possession" which he seeks, since, in some way or other, the Birt tenant stands between the Zemindar, as owner of the prima facie proprietary right and the cultivators (450). Deed by, disposing of Zemindari land, and reserving to himself part of land as "Zirat or zarait lands '-Meaning of zirait land in".

Quantion between comminder and eyet-Question between zemindar and recenue officers-Distinction-Interest of executant in land reserved.

S. the head of a joint Hindu family of zamindars, governed by the Mithakshara law, executed, what was loosely called, a deed of gift in favour of his only son, R. There were other members of the family besides 5 & R. By the deed he recited that among other family properties there was an 8 annas share in Monzah. V and he conveyed by gift to his son all his rights and interests in that and other properties and then declared that-

"400 rupees per month . . . shall continue to be paid to me . . . for defraying the expenses of the maintenance of me, the declarant, and for meeting my personal expenses, and, over and above that, 150 highes of land by measurement, situate in Mousa P, or in any other Mouza, shall remain in my prosession and occupancy as zirat land, and the measurement and the demarcation of the boundaries thereof shall be made as soon as possible, and the said land shall be held by me in my possession as airat without paying any yent therefor".

Held that on the true construction of the words "as ciral land", in the deed, they merely meant "for the personal use and maintainance of the declarant himself, without paying any sent therefor," and that the interest of the declarant continued no longer than his life, and determined with his death (99-100).

As between ryot and zamindar, and sometimes as between the gamindar and the revenue authorities, questions as to zirat or zarait lands involve very different considerations. The present case, however, is not one which touches a ryot's claim to be protected against dispossession so long as his rent is paid, or a zemindar's claim to an abatement of jumma in respect of lands held by him for his maintenance as zirat. In this case the word is used merely to describe the kind of interest reserved to the grantor under this particular deed, and its interpretation does not affect the general law or custom as to zirat lands. The deed reserves a certain area for the declarant's occupation, rent free, as part provision for his personal maintenance. So used, the term 'zirat" ceased to be a description truly applicable to these lands after the death of the declarant. not could third parties, who were entitled to his rights alone found upon this word any claim to rights in the land which he could never have enjoyed. With the determination of his interest this land would again form part of the general comindary property of the undivided family. During the lifetime of the declarant, the interest of his son in the 150 highes would be a vested zamindari interest in reversion. On the father's death the suspension of his right as zamindar to collect rents from the tenants of it would terminate, and as manager and head of the joint family he would possess and enjoy this parcel in like manner as the rest of the family property (100-1). ## Digwari tenure—Lands within Zamindary held on.

CLAIX TO.

MINERALS UNDERLYING-RIGHT TO. Proof of-Thanadari land-Claim on foot of.

The Rajah of Pachete sued, inter alia, the Secretary of State and certain persons described as digwar ghatwals for a declaration that the three plaint named mouzahs were included in his zamindari, and that he was the proprietor of the mineral rights under the said mouzahs.

The suit mouzahs were interlocked with the unquestioned portion of the plaintiff's zamindari but it was doubtful whether all three were absolutely enclosed in it. The topographical situation was such as to afford some slight presumption that the three mouzahs were part of the zamindari. The three mouzahs had been in the occupation of the digwar ghatwals for as far back as could be traced, certainly for a period anterior to the settlement with the Raja. Both the Coarts below were of opinion that in the ordinary sense of the word the suit villages were not within the plaintiff's zamindary, or, to put it in another way, both courts held that they were neither malguzari nor chowkidar chakran. The High Court, however, decided in his favour upon the theory that they were thanadari lands. The lands had, however, never been resumed; Government had never acquired an increase of revenue from the Raja, and the Raja never derived rent from the lands.

Held, reversing the High Court, that the long established usage and possession was not reconcilable with the theory that the mouzahs were thanadari lands, that the trial Judge was right in deciding that they were not within the plaintiff's zamindary, and that the plaintiff had, therefore, failed to prove that he had any right to the minerals under the three mouzahs. --- Suit to establish-Parties-Government if one.

In a suit by the zemindar of a permanently settled estate to establish his right to the minerals underlying two mouzhs which were within his Zemindary and were held by the defendant on Digwari tenure, held that the Government was not a necessary or a proper party to the suit (141).

Apparently the Government does not claim the minerals under permanently settled estates. However that may be, the Government has never claimed the minerals under the suit mouzahs or either of them, or put forward any claim inconsistent with the rights now asserted by the Zemindar. The rights of the Government, whatever they are, will not be prejudiced or affected by the result of a suit to which it is not a party (141). (Lord Macnaghten.) DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. In a suit brought by the Zamindar of a permanently settled estate to establish his right to the minerals underlying two mouzahs which were within his Zamindary and were held by the defendant on digwari tenure, held that the proprietary right in the underground minerals belonged to the Zamindar and not to the Digwar (141).

The suit mouzahs are within the plaintiff's zamindari. The permanent settlement was made with the then zamindar. No separate settlement was made with the defendant's predecessor in interest, if there was a digwar at the date of the permanent settlement, which seems more than Joubtful. No attempt was made to prove that the mineral rights now in question were vested in the digwar Lefore or at the time of the permanent settlement if the lands were then held on digwari tenure. Nor is there the slightest evidence tending to show or to suggest that the Zenindar ever parted with his mineral rights to the digwar (141). (Lord Macnaghten.) DURGA PRASAD SINGH v. BRAJA NATH BOSE.

-Liability for-Vis Major-Damages caused by.

ting of two tanks upon his land.

The defendant was under the law bound to maintain the tanks and keep them in good condition. He had no power to do away with them. The tanks were ancient, and formed part of what might be termed a natural system of irrigation. The accident in question was due not to any negligence on the part of the defendant either in keeping the tanks in good repair or otherwise but to an extraordinary

Held, affirming the Courts below, that the defendant was not responsible to the Railway Company for the injuries

The defendant in this case is in a very different position from the defendants in Fletcher v. Rylands. In that case, the defendants, for their own purposes, brought upon their land and there accumulated a large quantity of water by what is termed by Lord Cairns" a non-natural use" of their land. They were under no obligation, public or private, to make or to maintain the reservoir; no rights in it had been acquired by other persons, and they could have removed it if they had thought fit. The rights and liabilities of the delendant appear to their Lordships much more analogous to those of persons or corporations on whom statutory powers have been conferred and statutory duties imposed. The duty of the defendant to maintain the tanks is a duty of very much the same description as that of the railway company to maintain their railway; and their Lordships are of opinion that, if the banks of his tank are washed away by an extraordinary flood without negligence on his part, he is no more liable for damage occasioned thereby than they would be for damage to a passenger on their line, or to the lands of an adjoining proprietor occasioned by the banks of the railway being washed away under similar circumstances

A sunnud granted by Lord Clive to the then Zemindar of Singampatti contained the usual recitals, one of those setting forth that the object of the grant was to confer upon the Zemindar, his heirs and successors, "a permanent preperty in their land in all time to come". It contained no specification or description of the lands which it was intended to carry, but was a grant in general terms of the Zemindary as then held and possessed by the grantee. There was a marginal note specifying the names of three villages then composing the Zemindary.

Ii was contended that the effect of the note was to limit the grant to those three villages and a limited area in their immediate vicinity, and to exclude the claim of the grantee and his decendants for any land beyond those limits which was not shown to have been subsequently acquired from the Government by prescription.

Held that a marginal specification of the villages existing at the date of the grant could not control the plain terms of the grant, nor could it be taken as definitive of the extent of land, cultivable or not, which was then held and possessed by the Zemindar of the villages enumerated (154). Respondent, the Zemindar of Singampatti sued for cancellation of a decision of the Government Survey Officer, and for a declaration of his title to certain tracts of mountain land, covered with forest and jungle, as being parts of his Zemindary. The title of the respondent was a Sunnud, dated 22—4—1803, granted by Lord Clive to his ancestor, the then Zemindar of Singampatti. The Sunnud contained the asual recitals, one of those setting forth that the object of the grant was to confer upon the Zemindar, his heirs and successors, "a permanent property in their land in all time to come." It contained no specification or description of the lands which it was intended to carry, but was a grant in general terms of the Zemindary as then held and possessed by the grantee.

Held, that the respondent was entitled to succeed in the suit, if he established by direct evidence or as matter of reasonable inference, that the lands in dispute were held and possessed by the Zemindar at the time when he obtained a permanent title from the Government (154-5). Pergunnah Situated within—Mahal Separated from zemindary or part of zemindary—Evidence —(Contd.)

The respondent, Zemindar, sued the appellant, the holder of six taluks forming portion of pergunnah. S situated within his Zemindary, for enhancement of rent, treating the appellant as under-tenant. The decision of the suit-depended upon whether pergunnah, S was, as the respondent alleged a part of his Zemindary, or, as the appellantcontended, a mahal separated from the Zemindary of the respondent, and enjoyed as lakheraj from a period anterior to the permanent settlement.

Both the appellant and the respondent descended from a common ancestor, and the appellant belonged to the elder branch of the family. At one period the whole of the Zemindary was in the appellant's ancestor. A. But subsequently the whole Zemindary passed to the respondent's grandfather, and the deed of settlement granted to him 1803 under Madras Regulation XXV of 1802 established that the Zemindary then granted included pergunnah S. Further, on the occasion of the settlement the permanent revenue of Rs. 1,050 per annum or upwards was a sessed specifically on pergunnah S.

Held that from the above facts there asose the strongest presumption against the truth of the appellant's case.

If pergunnah S was held in 1802 as a distinct separate property, the then holder of it would have settled for it with Government, and would have taken a deed of permanent property, assuring to him that separate property. Such would have been the natural course of things unless the whole pergunnah were, as between the possessor of the land and Government, lakhiraj; but that it certainly was not, since we find it clearly proved that it was treated as malgazary land, and Government revenue assessed upon it. On the other hand there is also a strong presumption that the Zemindar of Jeypuram would not have settled for this land as he did, unless he had been in the receipt of the collections from it, or of some tent payable in respect of it (390). ## Permanent Settlement of.

Effect of-Lands owned by zemindar but not lakhiraj or thanadari-Zemindar's rights to-Effect on.

It was argued upon the language of the Regulations of 1790 and 1793 (VIII of) that the Government of the day recognised a pre-existing right in the zemindars and others and did not confer rights by the permanent settlement, and consequently that it was possible that lands owned by a zemindar—though not lakhiraj or thanadari—might never have been settled and yet be his property and so might descend to the successor in title of the original Zemindar, having remained unsettled through all these years. Whether such lands were to be reckoned as a part of a Zemindari or to be treated as de hors the zemindari was not made clear.

Their Lordships refrained from pronouncing on the soundness of that argument, observing, however, that it received no support from decided cases and appeared at first sight to be contrary to the teaching of the text-books (106-7). How were the lands dealt with on the occasion of the Permanent Settlement in 1802? They were then unquestionably held rent-free, under a subsisting Sanad, and the presemption is that they would be treated as Lakhiraj. In that case no revenue would be assessed upon them. Nor would the Zemindar acquire any right to question the validity of the title on which Lakhiraj land of that extent was held. That question could only be raised by Government (457). (See James II. — Object of — Title conferred by—Assumption in farour of, and not against claim to Zemindari subject of settlement—Onus on claimant—Zemindari traversed by navigable river of variable course.

Their Lordships wholly reject the conclusion that, whenever a zemindari has been the subject of Permanent Settlement and there was any dispute as to its external boundaries, the remindars would never be able to establish title to any portion of it if it happened to be traversed by a navigable river of variable course, unless they could show what were the exact boundaries of that course at the date of the Permanent Settlement. The object of the Permanent Settlement was to confirm the zemindars in their holdings at a fixed and immoveable rent, and, if assumptions are made one way or the other, they ought to proceed upon an attempt to justify the title rather than to render it insecure (368). G, the grandson of Rajah A' and son of the elder son of the Rajah V, sued the two sons of the younger sen of Rajah A' for the purpose of recovering certain property. The plaint stated the cause of action to this effect; that the plaintiff's father and the defendant's father were brothers; that the plaintiff's father, who was the elder, succeeded to the Zemindari of Pittapuram, iselonging to their father, Rajah A'. It averred that "the defendant's father, in 1845, received from plaintiff's father the estate called Kolanka Mutta, and having built a house in the village of C, attached to the said Mutta, has lived there separately". The plaint proceeded: "As the plaintiff's grand-mother, B, was a member of the plaintiff's family, she lived in some of the houses within the fort of Pittapuram belonging to plaintiff, and had in her use some grounds appertaining to that fort; and while so, she died on 11—3—1870. The defendants retained the said houses and grounds in their possession, even after her death, on the ground of their having occupied them with her until her death; and although the plaintiff demanded them to surrender them up to the plaintiff in July 1870, they have not done so yet." Then it was alleged that the fort was part of the plaintiff's ancient gemindari.

The material plea, on the part of the defendants, was to the effect that their paternal grand-father died in 1828, "and from seven or eight years afterwards the disputed houses and grounds have been in uninterrupted and undisputed possession and enjoyment of the defendant's father and themselves. Some of the disputed houses were built by the defendant's grand-father and some by their father, and not by plaintiff or his father. As the plaintiff's father and plaintiff have all along been maliciously disposed towards the defendant's father's and defendant's possession and enjoyment have been adverse to plaintiff's title, and therefore his claim is larred by the Statute of Limitation".

The High Court found against the defendant's contention namely, that there had been an adverse possession.

Held that under the circumstances of the case the defence of the defendants was not made out, and that the High Court were manifestly right in giving a judgment for the plaintiff, there being no dispute that the property in question was originally part of the zemindari. Revenue Sale of-Purchaser at.

ANNULMENT OF INCUMBRANCES—RIGHT OF.

—Rengal Later as regards—Policy of.

The general policy of the Revenue Sale Laws that have been passed since the Perpetual Settlement, has been to protect the public revenue by placing the purchaser of an estate sold for arrears of revenue in the position of the person who, at the time of the Decennial Settlement, engaged to pay the revenue then fixed. They, therefore, gave, or sought to give, to the purchaser, the power of abrogating all engagements made by the defaulting zemindar or his predecessors since the settlement, whereby the zemindary rents and profits, which were the security to Government for the due payment of its revenue, were diminished. The Indian Legislature, however, has not uniformly tried to effect this general object by precisely the same means. The various Regulations and Acts which it has from time to time passed for the purpose differ in the language of their provisions, and in the stringency of the powers conferred by them (323.4). -Presumption of -Basis and extent of.

The Statutory title which the law gives to an auction-purchaser of a Zemindary at a revenue sale is that, for the protection of the revenue, and in order to ensure its due payment by him, and in order to avoid the necessity of repeated sales of the property, he is remitted to all those rights which the original settlor at the date of the perpetual settlement had; and may, in consequence of that, sweep away or get rid of all the intermediate tenures and encumbrances created by preceding zemindars since that date. In the assertion of this right, the action purchaser is, no doubt, in many cases allowed to have the benefit of a certain presumption, and by virtue thereof to throw the burden of proof on his opponent. The presumption, however, is founded not so much on the principle just mentioned, as upon the principle that every bugah of land is bound to pay and contribute to the public revenue, unless it can be brought within certain known and specified exceptions, and that the right of the zemindar to enhance rent is also presumable until the contrary is shown. Accordingly, in many cases, a very heavy burden of proof has been placed upon the defendants whose tenures have been questioned by auction purchasers; and they have had to prove, in circumstances of great difficulty. that their tenure did really exist at the date of the perpetual settlement, or even twelve years before, in order to escape the consequences of the claim. The course of modernlegislation, and also of modern decision, has, however, if not ZAMINDARI-(Contd.)

These laws (Regulations conferring on parchasers at Government auction sales in the case of Zeminstaries the right of avoiding under-tenures created by the defaulter) cannot but occasionally operate very hardly on the grantees of subordinate interests, and they have, therefore, been materially modified by an Act of 1859 (143). Policy of.

The Regulations which have been made at different times empowering purchasers at Government auction sales in the case of zemindaries from which the Government income has not been duly paid to avoid and annul sub-tenures created since the Decennial Settlement have been couched in different language, but all with the same policy in view. It has been assumed, as the foundation of them, that the default of the zemindar may have been occasioned by improvident grants of talooks and other subordinate tensireat inadequate rents; that this was in breach of the condition on which the fund was originally created by the Sovereign power; and the purchaser, therefore, has been set free from the obligation of these grants, with certain specified exceptions, and with certain limitations of his power as to new tenancies to be created (142 3). GHATWALLY TENURE CREATED BEFORE DECENNIAL SETTLEMENT.

An auction purchaser of a zemindary at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, coming in by virtue of the sale, would appear to have no right to disturb the tenure (ghatwally tenure at a fixed rent, created before the Decennial Settlement) in the way in which an auction parchaser can sweep away incumbrances created since the Decennial Settlement. The only advantage which he gains by the character of being auction purchaser is, that he is relieved from any difficulty arising from the law of limitation, and that he is not conclusively barred by the acts or the omisalons of the former zemindars, whatever presumptions may arise from the omission to question the tenure by those who preceded him in the zemindary. It would seem, therefore, that if he has any right at all to destroy the tenure, it I ZAMINDARI-(Contd.)

JULKUR RIGHTS INCIDENT TO TEXURE WHICH CANNOT BE AVOIDED BY HIM.

-Suit for receivery of-Onns of proof in-Presump. tien in his favour.

Appellant was the auction purchaser of a zemindary at a revenue sale. The respondents represented holders of an istimrance or jagheere, which had existed before the decennial settlement and which the appellant, thesetore, had no right, as auction purchaser, to destroy. The appellant swed to recover possession of certain julker or rights of fishery, which the respondents claimed as incident to their tenure. They gave proof of their possession of the suit Jalkurs for a period of nearly 50 years.

Held that, even if the respondents had not given proof of long possession, there was nothing in the circumstances of the case, to relieve the appellant from the ordinary rule which the law imposed on a plaintiff, namely, that of establishing his own title afarmatively, and indeed of making out a strong title in order to disturb a possession of very long duration (867-8.)

In the circumstances of the case, the question resolves itself into one of parcel or no parcel-whether the julkurs are parcel of the old estate of under-tenant, or whether they have been granted by an act of the zemindar for the time being subsequent to the perpetual settlement.

The courts below were therefore right in holding that the burden of proving that these jalkurs did form part of the assess upon which the settlement was made, and that his means of meeting the revenue had been diminished by the alienation of them by means of acts subsequent to the date of the perpesual settlement, lay upon the zemindar (868.) -Heroditary tenure held at Mocurrarce jamma-Defence ples of-Proof of - Quantum-Inheritance-Words of -Absence of -Effect of -Plea based on absence of. if open to semindar in such suits.

Appellant who claimed title to the larger part of a gemindari under a sale for arrears of Government revenue, which took place in 1819, instituted 5 suits to enhance the rents of 5 talooks forming part of that zemindary, founding his alleged right to enhance the rents of a talook or a sub tenure held upon payment of a rent variable according to the current rates of the district. The defence was that the suit talooks had been held at fixed and invariable rent for more than 12 years antecedent to the permanent settlement, and were consequently not liable to further assessment.

The evidence adduced in the case proved that for upwards of a century the suit talooks had been treated as hereditary, and as such had both descended from father to son, and been the subject of purchase. Further, in the mutation papers of 1807, one of the talooks was expressly termed "hereditary". It was contended for the appellant that the documents relied upon by the defendants contained ZAMINDARI- ( M.C.)

alleged tenure.

Held; that the objection was not open to the appellant in the suits as brought, and that, even it it were open, it could hardly prevail against the evidence in the case that for upwards of a century the suit talooks had been treated as herelitary, and as such had both descended from father to son, and been the subject of purchase (191.)

The appellant's suits are for the enhancement of rent. The pleadings consequently admit the existence of the tenures, and the lawful occupation of the defendants. The only question between the parties is whether the talooks are Tashkhis or Mocarrares, i.e., whether they are held at a variable or at a fixed and invariable rent (191.) Tenure held at fixed and invariable rent for more than 12 years prior to perfetual settlement—Defence plea of—Onus of proof of.

The suits out of which the appeals arose were instituted by the appellant, and each of them was founded on the alleged right of the appellant as zemindar claiming, in part at least, as purchaser at a sale for arrears of Government revenue, to enhance the rents of a Talook described as Tastikisi zimma, or a sub-tenure held upon payment of a rent variable according to the current rates of the district. The principal question in each suit was, whether the Talook that was the subject of it had been held from a period considerably anterior to the Decennial Settlement at a fixed or Mocurrary jumma, or was held on a rent variable, and, therefore, subject to enhancement.

Meld, that, as the law stood in 1858, the ones lay on the defendants of proving that the suit Talooks had been held at a fixed and invariable rent for more than 12 years antecedent to the perpetual settlement (189.) Zanzibar territory—Land owner's rights in Law

The administration of the East Africa Protectorate, acting under the Indian Land Acquisition Act I of 1894, for the purposes of a railway at Mombasa, acquired plots of land on the island from owners to whom compensation was awarded.

Possession was taken before the land had been duly acquired under the Act, and building for the railway purposes went forward without the consent of the present claimants. The provision of the Indian Land Acquisition Act became applicable at Mombasa on the 27th May 1896, under power given by the Zanzibar Order in Council of 1884. The declaration of requirement of the land was made on the 2nd November following. The assessment of the value of the land acquired was made by a Court held by the Vice-Consul at Mambasa, and heard in appeal by Her Majesty's Court for Zanzibar, which increased the compensation awarded.

As part of their compensation the respondents claimed the value of the buildings erected on the land before the date of the declaration alleging that the buildings had, as soon as they were attached to the land, become the property of the then owners of the land, according to English law. ZANZIBAR-(Contd.)

Bevenue Bale of-Purchaser at-(Coutd.)

That law, however, recognises the principle that the incidents of property in land are regulated by the law of its site. Therefore the system of law applicable on this question was the law of Zanzibar regulating the holding of immove able property. That law was the Muhammadan. It was true that the Article XVI of the Treaty of 1886 conferred on British subjects the rights of exterritoriality as regarded their persons and their property. But that was consistent with the application of the rule of the lex loci rei titae.

The whole question turned on the meaning of exterritoriality. It could not be maintained that when an Englishman, in foreign territory, having that right purchased land, it was thereupon attended by the same incidents that would belong to it, if it were treated as actually transferred to England. The real state of things was that the English Law, for such purposes as the present, applied to the local law of Zanzibar.

The source of jurisdiction is the Treaty, giving authority to the Queen in foreign territory, Zanzibar. The English Acts relating to foreign jurisdiction supervene, enabling Her Majesty in Council to or Jer what way her authority over British Subjects there shall be exercised. The Order in Council then is that jurisdiction shall be exercised partly in accordance with certain Anglo-Indian legislation and partly with English law. That legislation is silent on this point; and the English law, for purposes of which the present is one, incorporate the local law of Zanzibar. On 28-6-1922, the Municipal Commissioners of Municipal pality D passed, under S. 96 of the Bengal Municipal Act, 1884, two resolutions:-

(1) That the question of a general revision of assessment be postponed for a year in view of the economic distress prevailing in the country, and that all new and improved buildings which had escaped notice be assessed first and the Vice. ret, and the Vice-Chairman be requested to undertake the work; and (2) That the general revision of assessment of holdings be undertaken without delay, as it was overdue.

The Chairman did not, as he was bound to, under Rule 16 of the bye-laws of the Municipality, put these resolutions separately, but he put them as alternatives and ascertained the numbers in favour of each respectively. In accordance with the terms of the second of the resolutions above referred to, the valuation duly took place, and the assessment list was published on 28-3-1923, for the year 1923-4. The re-valuation was subsequently signed by the Chairman and deposited in the office on 28-3-1923, and notice was published on the same day.

The courts below held that the irregularity in not conforming to Rule 16 of the bye-laws of the Municipality was a mere defect of form under S. 358 of the Municipal Act, and that the assessment was not invalidated thereby. They further over-ruled, relying upon S. 102 of the Act, the appellant's contention that the rate was invalid because the Commissioners, before the result of the re-valuation had been ascertained and become known to them, sanctioned a budget framed on the basis of the old valuation and of the percentage at which rates had been for some years levied on that valuation.

-Transfer of tenure-Rent-decree obtained against original tenure-holder after-Validity against transferee of-Sale of tenure in execution of-Transferee's right to object to-S. 65-Effect of-Chapter XIV of Act-Scope and effect of.

Before the Bengal Tenancy Act of 1885 came into force the duty was laid specifically upon the transferee of a tenure to see that his name was recorded in the landlord's Sherista, and it may well have been that, if he failed without good reason to do this, he could not be heard to object to a decree passed against the recorded tenants, even though their interest in the tenure had in fact ceased. But the Act of 1885 made a radical change in this respect, Instead of the transferee being bound to go to the landlord to get his name recorded, it was provided that a voluntary transfer must be by a registered instrument, and that before registration a fee was to be paid by the transferree and notice given by the registration office. through the collector to the landlord, or in the case of an execution sale by the executing court. In this state of the law their Lordships can see no foundation for the contention that a landlord can ignore all transfers of the tenure and rely upon decrees obtained by him against persons whom he chooses for his own purposes still to record as his tenants, though he knows, or must be taken to know, that their interest in the tenure has ceased (837). Only arrears of rent are charged by S. 65 of the Act upon the tenure, and only such arrears can be realised in execution by the sale of the tenure. Chapter XIV of the Act does not purport to enlarge or restrict the exercise of this right, but only provides the machinery for working it out. If a landlord seeks to use this machinery for the recovery of something that is not rent, to the prejudice of a third party on whom the decree is not binding, Chapter XIV of the Act does not deprive the latter of his right to object to the same (838). ——S. 6 (a)—Tenure held from before Permanent Settlement—Rent of—Enhancement of—Right to—Proof of—Onus on landlord—Presumption arising from entry in record-of-rights—Evidence to rebut—Quantum—Assessments occasional owing to increase of area—Right to enhance if can be founded on.

The appellant was the owner of a Zemindary, which consisted, inter alia, of a number of taluks, and one nijtaluk of the Zemindar which was split up into a number of tappaks. The taluks and tappaks existed before the Permanent Settlement. In or about the year 1912, a survey of the estate was commenced, and a record-of-rights was prepared under the Bengal Tenancy Act. The entries in the record-of-rights described the said taluks and tappaks as "rent liable to enhancement." After the publication of the final record-of-rights, the appellant instituted suits against the talukdars and tappahdars under S. 105 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, ostensibly for the settlement of a fair and equitable rent in respect of the lands held by them, but in reality for enhancement of rent. The Courts below took into account the presumption in favour of the appellant arising out of the entry in the record-of-rights that the tenures were liable to enhancement, but nevertheless held, on the evidence in the case, that the appellant had failed to discharge the onus cast on him by S. 6 (a) of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The only circumstance relied upon by the appellant against the permanency of rent was that the tuppahs were assessed in 1824 and that both the taluks and tuppaks were assessed on 1847 for 30 years. It appeared, however, from the various reports of the Revenue Officers that the rent of the tenure was intended to have been fixed for ever, and that no fresh assessments would have been made but for the fact that neither the areas nor the boundaries had ever been fixed. The courts below also found upon evidence that the increase, if any, was due to excess

Held that, in view of the special circumstances of the case under which the assessments of 1824 and 1847 were made, and the statements of the Revenue Officers above referred to the said assessments were insufficient to raise an inference in law that the appellant had proved the conditions enabling him to enhance the rent. Quare, whether under the Chinese Customary law a wislow has right to share in the estate of her late husband or whether her right is limited to maintenance out of such estate.

Where the Courts below found that the widow of a Chinese Buddhist, who died intestate, administered the estate of her deceased husband for herself and her children from the death of her husband, and that, whilst she was so administering it, she mortgaged part of the estate for money, borrowed for necessity and expended for the benefit of the estate, held, affirming the Courts below, that, whether the Chinese customary law or the ordinary law was applicable to the case, the mortgage was a valid mortgage and was binding upon the property comprised therein. -Title to land-Estoppel under S. 116 of Evidence Act -Derec declaring As title to land as aginst B based on-Expiry of lease-It's suit for declaration of title to same land as against A after-Maintainshifty.

The appellant was one of the four children of one S. V., who had died intestate. In an ejectment suit the first respondent sought to obtain a de rec of ejectment against the appellant, the widow of S. V., and the three other children of S. V. The 1st respondent, whose title in the suit land was derived under a conveyance to him by the widow (and executrix) of S. V. had granted a lease to the appellant of the said land, upon which he and the other defendants were residing. That suit went up on appeal to the Privy Council. The Board was of opinion that that the conveyance by the widow operated to pass to the 1st respondent only her interest as widow in the said land, and not the beneficial interests of the children, but that the appellant was estopped, under S. 116 of the Evidence Act, from denying the title of the first respondent as regards his (appellants') own share of the suit land. The Board accordingly passed a decree declaring that the 1st respondent was entitled to a quarter of two-thirds (or a one-sixth share) of the land sued for.

The appellant sued subsequently to obtain a decision that the one-sixth share so declared by the Foord to be the property of the 1st respondent was his (appellants') property not by any title acquired by him subsequently to the date of the Board's decision, but by virtue of a title then existing in him as one of the children of the intestate. He claimed that the estoppel under S. 116, which prevened him from asserting his title in the ejectment action, was temporary only, and ceased to operate when he gave up possession of the land and when his tenancy accordingly came to an end. He claimed that being no longer estopped under S. 116, he was entitled to assert and obtain a declaration of his ownership, and that the matter was not res indicata.

Held, over-ruling the appellant's contention, that the subsequent suit was barred under S. 11, C. P. C., because the judgment of the Board in the prior suit had, in clear and unambiguous language, determined finally and conclusively the ownership of the share claimed by the appellant in the subsequent suit. cousin, while the widow being so entitled took possession of the whole of the estate in lieu of her clower. Thereafter, assigners from the cousin, alleging that the widow's dower had long before been discharged from her usufruct of the estate, sued for the unconditional delivery of possession to them of a three-fourths share of the estate. The plaint contained an alternative prayer for the delivery of such share on payment of such portion of the dower debt as might be found to be due. In that suit it was found that a portion of the dower debt was still due, and a decree was passed for the delivery of possession of the share sued for on payment by the plaintiffs of the amount so found due for dower. In arriving at the balance due for dower, that decree did not, however, take into account the interest upon the dower in arrear, no such claim having been put forward by the widow. The amount decreed for dower was not paid and presession was retained. In a suit for possession of the three-fourths share subsequently instituted by the representative in interest of the plaintiffs in the prior suit against the widow or her representative in interest, held that a claim by the latter to charge any interest in respect of the period during which dower remained unpaid was barred under S. 11, Expl. iv of C. P. C.

In the first suit, the widow's claim to interest was one which might, and which ought to, have been made ground of defence. (Lord Blanesburgh.) NAWASI BEGAM r. DILAF-ROZ BEGAM. (1930) L. R. 57 I. A. 181 = 59 M.L.J. 262.

-S.17-Mortgage of properties in British India, some being outside jurisdiction, and of properties not in British India-Forcelosure or sale on foot of Suit for-Jurisdiction of British Indian Court to entertain,

In a suit for foreclosure or sale on foot of certain mortgages instituted in the Sub-Court of Satara in the Bombay Presidency, it appeared that the properties, in respect of which relief was sought, were situated in Satara, Felgaum and Kolhapur, Satara and Belgaum being, and Kolhapur not being, within British India.

Held that the Sub Court of Satara had no jurisdiction to try the suit, so far as it related to the mortgaged properties situated in Kolhapur; that it had jurisdiction to try the suit so far as it related to the mortgaged properties situated in Satara; and that, inasmuch as the mortgaged properties in Belgaum were within the jurisdiction of a different Court in British India, it had jurisdiction to deal

The words "a suit to obtain relief respecting immoveable property " in S. 17, C.P.C. are wide enough to cover suits for foreclosure or sale on foot of mortgages. "within the jurisdiction of different Courts" in that section must, however, he held to mean within the jurisdiction of different Courts to which the Code of Civil Procedure applies, that is to say, Courts in British India, because the provisions of the Code are regulations dealing with the jurisdiction and governing the procedure of the Courts in British India. and the court accepted that security bond and raised the attachment. Eventually a decree was passed in the suit in favour of S against the French Company, and the suit was dismissed against M. Nevertheless, S applied to the court for an order calling upon the surety to pay into court the sum mentioned in the security bond executed by him to be paid to S in satisfaction of his decree. The Court made an order as prayed for, notwithstanding M's opposition, and the amount paid into court pursuant to that order was paid over to S. There was no appeal from that order and it became final.

M thereupon brought the suit out of which the appeal to the P.C. arose, inter alia, for the recovery from S of the sum paid into court by the surety under the security bond and paid over to S in satisfaction of his decree. M's case was that the decree in the prior suit having been only against the French Company, the amount of the security bond, on its true construction, was not available to S to satisfy that decree, and that the order directing the payment of that amount to S in satisfaction of that decree was errone-

Held that S. 47, C.P.C. barred the suit. The question in this case arises between the parties to the prior suit and relates to the satisfaction of the decree therein. So far as the order for payment out is concerned it is expressed to be in satisfaction of the decree, it has no other meaning, and that in itself precludes any cause of action by the present plaintiff in the present suit. -Interference under-Jurisdiction-Rules as to. The question whether a statutory presumption is rebutted by the rest of the evidence is always a question of fact.

Questions of law and fact are no doubt often difficult to disentangle, but, as regards jurisdiction to interfere in second appeal under S. 100 of C. P. C., the following propositions are clearly established:-

(1) There is no jurisdiction to entertain a second appeal on the ground of erroneous finding of facts, however gross the error may seem to be.

(2) The proper legal effect of a proved fact is essentially a question of law, but the question whether a fact has been proved when evidence for and against has been properly admitted is necessarily a pure question of fact.

(3) Where the question to be decided is one of fact, it does not involve an issue of law merely because documents which were not instruments of title or otherwise the direct foundations of rights but were really historical materials, have to be construed for the purpose of deciding the question.

(4) A second appeal would not lie because some portion of the evidence might be contained in a document or documents and the first appellate court had made a mistake as to its meaning. (Sir Bined Mitter.) WALI MAHOMED v. MD. BAKSH. (1929) 57 I. A. 86=

The appellants, the Indian Company, were incorporated in India in 1920 with a nominal capital of 7 crores of rapers divided into 350,000 shares of Rs. 200 each. Promoted as a private company by two English Companies, all the issued shares of the Indian Company were practically throughout held by one or other of those companies. The Indian Company was really established that it might acquire from the English Companies 312.817 shares held by them in the Burma Corporation. Ltd. The Indian Company entered into two agreements with the English Companies in regard to this matter, one in February, 1920, and the other in November, 1923.

By the agreement of February, 1920, the Indian Company contracted to purchase the whole block of the Burma Corporation shares in consideration of the issue of an equal number of shares in the Indian Company credited as fully paid. Out of the 312.817 shares of the Indian Company representing the then consideration for the Burma shares, one-half-or 156,408 shares-were to be allotted immediately, while the remaining shares were to be altotted at the rate of one share for each two shares of the Burma Corporation as delivered to the Indian Company. The whole were, however, to be delivered Within 3 years. In the meantime possession of the undelivered shares was to be retained by the English Companies, and during the period prior to completion those companies were given power from time to time to deposit and charge the shares for their own liabilities joint or several or for their liabilities jointly with any other parties, The English Companies were also given power with the consent of the Indian Company to sell any of the undelivered shares and either to utilize the proceeds of sale in discharge of such Eabilities in which event the purchase consideration was to be "proportionately reduced"-or to remit the proceeds to the Indian Company, in which event "the equivalent purchase consideration for the shares" was to be duly allotted. The 156,408 shares of the Indian Company credited as fully paid were duly issued by that company as provided by the principal agreement. No Burma shares at all were ever delivered to the Indian Company. On the day of the expiration of the three years limited for completion, all that had happened was that 156,408 shares of the Indian Company had been issued as fully paid for nothing.

By the agreement of November, 1923, it was provided that the Burma shares need not any of them be delivered; that the English Companies, with the general or special authority of the Indian Company, might sell any of the shares and should in that event on completion pay to the Indian Company the proceeds of sale, together with all dividends received on the shares. In consideration for this, it was agreed by the English Companies that the purchase consideration mentioned in the agreement of February, 1920, should not in any case exceed the 156,408 shares already allotted as above stated.

The agreements left the English Companies with, in effect, the same dominion over the shares as they enjoyed before the so-called sale. They did not in any real sense embody a purchase of the Burma Corporation shares by the Indian Company, in consideration of the issue of fully paid shares of that Company. They more truly embodied an arrangement under which the Indian Company, getting everything to which under the agreements it was entitled, would receive a sum of money only, a sum which it was under the arrangement bound to accept in satisfaction whatever its amount might be. And as, in the events, it received a sum, less than the nominal value of the shares by Rs. 32 each, it was contended for the Indian Company that the resultant figure represented the loss sustained by the Company in respect of the transaction.

Held. overruling the contention, that, on the principle enunciated in the case of Moseley v. Koffysontein Mines, Ltd. (1904) 2 Ch. 108 (118), the English Companies remained between them liable for the discount which had in fact materialized, and that, as there was no doubt as to the solvency of either of them, the Indian Company sustained no loss at all.

The Commissioner found that in 1920 each share in the Indian Company was worth only Rs. 98. But the Indian Company nevertheless contended, relying upon In re Wragg, (1897) 1 Ch. 796, that, in ascertaining, on a question between it and the revenue, whether the transaction resulted in loss or not, the allotted shares must be taken at their nominal value of Rs. 200.

Held, further affirming the High Court, that In re Wragg did not compel the court to take the nominal value of the shares allotted by the Indian Company as necessarily representing the price paid by that Company for the Burma shares, and that that case was no bar to the Court ascertaining the true value of the shares.

In rx Wragg has no application to a case in which the transaction regarded as a purchase and sale of shares, was illusory altogether. It is also inapplicable to a case in which the issue is one between the Revenue and the Indian Company only. (Lord Blanesburgh.) THE TRUSTESS CORPORATION (INDIA), LTD. v. COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, BOMBAY PRESIDENCY (1930) 57 I. A. 152 = 59 M. L. J. 242.

Fully-Paid shares-Issue of shares as Validity of Possibility of result being issue thereof at a discount-Effect.

If an arrangement for the issue of shares is such that in the course of its due working out there is as much as a possibility that in the result the shares will have been issued at a discount, then the issue of the shares as fully paid cannot be justified. Paid up share-Issue of share as-Effect-Company if becomes debtor to share-holder in respect of that full amount.

The view is not correct that a company by the issue of a share credited with a definite sum as paid thereon, becomes in some sense a debtor to its share-holder in respect of that full amount. A Company is in no sense debtor to capital. The amount credited upon a share may, as between one shareholder and another, while the Company is a going concern, determine the proportion of profits receivable by him as dividend, and, in a winding-up, his proportion of surplus assets. But it has no influence to extend or increase the aggregate amount available for decision in due course of administration among? the whole body of share-holders; nor does it make the Company a debtor for any sum at all. #### COMPANIES' ACT (VII OF 1913).

S. 109—Registration of mortgage parsuant to-Failure—Effect.

Sec. 169 of the Companies' Act, which requires a mortgage coming within its terms to be registered in a particular manner and within a fixed time, does not avoid a mortgage not so registered absolutely, but only so far as any security is given thereby on the Company's property or undertaking. The effect, therefore, is that if a mortgage is not registered it is valid as an admission of debt, but as against a creditor or the liquidator it could not be said that a valid change on the Company's property had been created. (Six Laucelot Sanderson.) LALA RAM NARAIN v. RADHA KISHEN.

(1929) 57 I. A. 76.

— S. 120—Extension of time for registration under-Order of Reservation in, of rights of any mortgager accrued in the meantime—Meaning and effect of—Mortgage expressly stated to be only second mortgage if converted into first mortgage merely by priority of registration.

The Pioneer Mills, Ltd. (hereinafter called the Company) who carried on the business of sugar manufacturers, executed, on 10.8-1922, a mortgage in favour of the plaintiffs, the property comprised in the mortgage being the Company's sugar refinery and the distillery. It was stipulated that the mortgage should be treated as a second mortgage against the sugar refinery and as a first mortgage against the distillery, and the mortgagor (the Company) covenanted that "there was no other charge or mortgage against the mortgaged premises except that of the Tata Bank against the Sugar Refinery". The mortgage to the plaintiffs was registered in pursuance of the provisions of the Indian Companie's Act of 1913 on 21-11-1922, the time for registration having been extended, under S. 120 of that Act, by an order of the High Court of Calcutta, dated 14-11-1922.

On the same day, viz., 10-8-1922, the Company executed a mortgage in favour of the Tata Bank (hereinafter called the Bank), the premises comprised in the mortgage being the refinery and the machinery attached thereto on which the plaintiffs held a second mortgage. The mortgage to the Bank was registered under the Companies' Act on 22-12-1922, the time for registration having been extended, under S. 120 of that Act, by an order of the High Court at Calcutta, dated 6-12-1922. That order extending the time for registration expressly stated that it (the order) was to be "without prejudice to the rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime".

Held that the Court having extended the time for registration of the Bank's mortgage, and the mortgage having been registered within that time, the mortgage was constituted a valid charge ab initio, i.e., from the date of its execution, triz., 10-8-1922, subject only to such conditions as were imposed by the Court in the order which extended the time; that, as, on the face of the plaintiff's mortgage, it was only a second charge upon the refinery, the reservation in the order of 6-12-1922 extending the time for registration of the Bank's mortgage that the order should be without prejudice to the "rights of any mortgagee accrued in the meantime" could not have been intended to convert the plaintiff's second mortgage upon the refinery into a first charge thereon and that the said order had not the effect of interfering with the priority of the Bank's mortgage upon the refinery over the plaintiffs' mortgage therein.

The right which the plaintiffs had to enforce their mort. CRIMINAL gage against the property of the Company depended not only upon the registration, but also on the terms of the precedent to.

mortgage itself, and the right which they had to enforce in respect of the refinery was a second charge only.

The expression "in the meantime" in the order must be taken to mean the period between the date when the said mortgage should have been registered and the date of actual registration. (Str. Lancelot Sanderson.) LALA RAM NARAIN v. RADHA KISHEN. (1929) 57 I. A. 76. CONTRACT.

- Reservation by mutual consent of - Evidence.

In an action for damages for breach of contract brought by the respondents, shipowners, against the appellant, a shipper, the latter admitted the contract and the non-performance of it, and pleaded that the contract had before breach been dely rescinded by mutual consent. All the evidence upon the vital issue of rescission had before the hearing been taken on commission, and the trial Judge had, therefore, not had the advantage of seeing the witnesses in the box. The trial Judge held that the appellant had made good his plea of rescission, and dismissed the suit with costs. On appeal, the appellant had failed to establish his case of rescission, and decreed the suit.

On further appeal to the Privy Council, held that the judgment of the appellate Court expressed on the evidence was the only conclusion judicially permissible. (Lord Ralmenhargh.) ISPAHANI P. SOCIETA VENEZIANA DI NAVIZASIONE A VAPORE. (1930) 59 M.L.J. 1.

Authority to adopt.

-Evidence of-Widow adopting-Statement of deceased, in mutation proceedings to obtain mutation of mames in favour of adopted son-Admissibility of, under S. 32 (3) or S. 33 of Evidence Act, against reversioner-Cross-examination on that point by reversioner disallowed-Effect.

The principle upon which a statement made by a dead person against his pecuniary or proprietary interest is regarded as admissible in evidence is that in the ordinary course of affairs a person is not likely to make a statement to his own detriment unless it is true. But this sanction is manifestly wanting in the case of a Hindu widow who, after a life-long enjoyment of her husband's property, desires at the end to pass it on to her own relations and for this purpose goes through the form of adopting her brother's grandson, to effectuate which she is bound to allege authority from her husband.

Held, accordingly, that a statement made by a deceased Hindu widow in proceedings to obtain a mutation of names in the register in favour of a boy whom she had adopted to her deceased husband that she had authority to adopt to him was not against her pecuniary or proprietary interest within the meaning of S. 32 (3) of the Evidence Act and was not admissible in evidence under that sub-section.

Held further, that the widow's statement was not ad-inasmuch as the Commissioner in the mutation proceedings definitely ruled, and rightly, that the question as to the power to adopt was not in issue in those proceedings and disallowed all cross-examination on that point by the reversioners (against whom the statement was sought to be used in evidence in the suit out of which the appeal arose), and the reversioners therefore never had the opportunity or right to cross-examine upon it.

The true reading of S. 33 is that the adverse party in the first proceeding had both the right and the opportunity of cross-examining, and not " the right or opportunity to crossexamine," (Lord Buckmaster.) -Proof strict of-Necessity-Lapse of time-Necessity greater after long.

A very grave and serious onus rests upon any person who seeks to displace the natural succession of property by the act of an adoption. In such a case the proof requires strict and almost severe scrutiny, and the longer the time goes back from the date when the power was given to the time when it comes to be examined, the more necessary it is having regard to the fallibility of human memory and the uncertainty of evidence given after the lapse of such time, to see that the evidence is sufficient and strong. ## Migrating family.

-Law governing-Evidence.

The question was as to the validity of an adoption made by a Hindu widow without the express authority of her husband for that purpose, and the answer to that question depended upon the school of Hindu law applicable to the case, the Bombay School of law or the Benares School of missible in evidence under S. 33 of the Evidence Act also, law. The property, the title to which was in question, was within the Presidency of Bombay. But the evidence showed that the ancestors of the husband of the widow originally came from the District of Delhi, where the Benares School of law was applicable, and that that was the origin of the family. The evidence further showed that the old customs prevailing on the Delhi side were still good among the family.

Hdd that the proper inference was that the old customs prevailing on the Delhi side had been introduced into the present place, Bombay, and that the family continued to be governed by the Benares School of Hindu law. -S. 4 (3) (1)-Trust deed-Income of property covered by, applicable to purposes neither religious nor charitable-Liability to tax of entire-Portion of property exclusively appropriated to charitable or religious purposes not identifiable-Effect.

In a case in which a claim to exemption from incometax was based upon S. 4 (3) (1) of the Act, it appeared that under the trust deeds on which the claim to exemption was founded the income of the trust property was applicable to purposes many of which were neither religious nor charitable, and that no part of the property could be identified or appropriated exclusively to charitable or religious purposes,

Held, that the whole of the property covered by the trust deeds in question was assessable to income-tax. (Lord Tomlin.) MUHAMMAD IBRAHIM RIZA MALAK . COMMISSIONER OF INCOME-TAX, NAGPUR.

The Income-Tax Act, 1922, by Ss. 6 and 12, brings into charge for the purposes of income tax the income derived from a Zemindari and a Zemindar is assessable in respect of income profits and gains derived from that source.

In assessing a Zemindar to income-tax in respect of the income derived from his Zemindari, his income, profits and gains from that source should be computed after making proper allowance in respect of the jama assessed and

INCOME TAX ACT OF 1922-(Contd.)

When the Permanent Settlement Regulations contain assurances against any claim to an increase of the jama, based on an increase of the Zemindari income, they contain no promise that the Zemindar shall in respect of the income which he derives from his Zemindari be exempt from liability to any future general scheme of property taxation, or that the income of a Zemindari shall not be subjected with other incomes to any future general taxation of incomes.

The words of S. 12 (1) of the Income-Tax Act of 1922 are expressly framed so as to make the sixth head mentioned in S. 6 describe a true residuary group embracing within it all sources of income, profits and gains provided the Act applies to them i. c., provided that they accrue or arise or are received in British India or are deemed to accrue or arise or to be received in British India as provided by S. 4 (1), and are not exempted by virtue of S. 4 (3).

In S. 6, the words "other sources" used in relation to the words "property" would naturally mean sources other than the source which the word "property" connotes in this Act. (Lord Russell of Killwarn) PROBHAT CHANDRA BARUA? EMPEROR.

-Art. 120-Bengal Tenancy Act, 1885-Rent decree against original tenure-holder after transfer of tenure-Sale of tenure in execution of Suit by transferee for declaration against landlord's right of Limitation Starting point.

Art. 120 of the Limitation Act applies to a suit by the transferee of a tenure for a declaration that the landlord is not entitled to have the tenure sold in execution of a decree, called a rent-decree, obtained by him against the original tenure-holders. The starting point of the period provided by that article is, in such a case, not the date of the decree, but the date on which the landlord first applied for the sale of the tenure in execution of that decree. -Putative marriage-Marriage which is mull if can

The doctrine of putative marriage was well known to the Canon law, and has been adopted by many systems which have founded their law on the Canon law. -Validity of-Law governing-Law of place where it is effected-Law of place of parties domicile.

It there is one question better settled than any other in International Law, it is that as regards marriage-putting aside the question of capacity-Locus regit actum. If a marriage is good by the locus of the country where it is effected, it is good all the world over, no matter whether the proceeding or ceremony which constituted marriage according to the law of the place would not constitute marriage in the country of the domicils of one or other of the spouses. If the so-called marriage is no marriage in the place where it is celebrated, there is no marriage any where, although the ceremony or proceeding if conducted in the place of the party's domicil would be considered a good marriage. Of course, these results may be altered by positive i.c., Statute I.aw. (Viscount Dunedin). EUGENE BETHAUINE D. DAME ANNE-MARIE VIVONNE DASTOUS. (1929) 122 I. C. 312.

-Servant-Personal danger to-Risk of-Order for service at particular place involving-Legality of-Disobedience by servant of, though willing to work at other places free from such danger-Dismissal for grave fault in case of-Damages for wrongful dismissal-Claim for-Maintainability.

The respondent was an employee of the appellant Bank. By his contract of service he was bound to serve as an employee of the Bank at Constantinople and other places. On being asked to work at Constantinople he represented to the appellant Bank that he being a Turkish subject, his life was in danger at Constantinople in its then troubled state, and requested a provisional transfer to one of the Bank's agencies outside Turkey. The appellant declined to accede to that request and refused to allow him to leave whereupon the respondent fled from Constantinople. The appellant Bank dismissed him from service without notice and without pension for grave fault within the meaning of the book of regulations which dealt with conditions of service and a contributory pension fund for the staff.

In a suit brought by the respondent for damages for wrongful dismissal, held,

(1) that the risk to the respondent was such that he was not bound to obey the Bank's order to him to remain in Constantinople, and the said order was therefore not a lawful one;

(2) that the respondent's refusal was not a grave fault within the meaning of the book of regulations;

(3) that the respondent's offer of service outside Turkey afforded a complete answer to the appellant's pleas that the respondent was under a permanent disability to serve the appellant and that the contract of service had become incapable of performance by the time of dismissal;

MORTGAGE.

Mortgagee with.

In a suit for sale brought on foot of certain mortgages executed between the years 1840 and 1844, and treated as consolidated, the High Court held that the parties had agreed that the security of the mortgaged properties in British India, that is, in Satara and Belgaum, should be given up, and that the mortgaged properties in Kolhapur Iply should be considered as security for the debt. They thought that a presumption to the said effect was raised by two facts, (1) that before 1860 the properties in British territory "were given back" to the mortgagors and (2) that no steps were taken to recover possession until the suit was filed long after.

Held, that the facts relied upon were insufficient to raise the presumption to which the High Court referred (203).

There is no evidence to justify the finding that the said properties "were given back", if by these words the learned Judges meant a retransfer of the properties. The mortgage deeds were not cancelled. They remained with the mortgagee or his successors, and they were produced and proved by the plaintiffs at the trial. There is no evidence of any surrender of the plaintiffs' rights, except the fact that after 1859 the plaintiffs or their predecessor ceased to receive the rents and profits of the mortgaged properties situated in Satara and Belgaum. The mortgagor was the spiritual guru of the mortgagee, and the mortgagee might have given up the possession of the villages in British territory to enable the mortgagor to maintain the establishment nd meet the expenses of the Samsthan, without in any way tending to give up his rights as mortgagee or to abandon remedies, if and when he desired to enforce them 03.4). of, by mortgager to mortgagee rubsequent to mortgage-Plea of-Onut of Proof of Question as to-Fact or Law.

Where, in a suit for redemption of a usufructuary mortgage for a term, the mortgagees admit the mortgage sued upon, but plead a subsequent sale of the mortgaged property to them, the onus is on the mortgagees to show that the mortgage had been extinguished by subsequent sale.

The question whether there has been such a sale or not is a question of fact, and it does not cease to be such a question merely because some of the items of evidence adduced to prove the sale consist of entries in the record of rights prepared under the Punjab Land Revenue Act XVI of 1887. OUDH-LAND TENURES IN-Under proprietary right-Thekedar Right merely if a-Issue as to-

The suit was for a declaration that the defendant had no proprietary or under-proprietary right in a village situated whithin a taluqa of which the plaintiff was the taluqdar. In his right of taluqdar the plaintiff was the superior proprietor of the said village. The defendant was in possession of the village, and at the time of the suit he was paying to the plaintiff a yearly rent. His defence was that he held under-proprietary rights in the village, which had been granted to his ancestor by the ancestor of the plaintiff four generation before. He denied that he was merely a thekedar of the Village as alleged by the plaintiff.

The plaintiff and the defendant did not prove the particular cases on which they respectively relied in the pleadings. The plaintiff failed to establish that the defendant was mere thekedar, and the defendant failed to prove the deed of gift on which he relied. The Chief Court held, however, on the other evidence in the case, reversing the trial judge, that in fact there was a grant by the ancestor of the defendant of an heritable and transferable estate in the suit willage, by reason of which the defendant had under-proprietary rights. On a detailed consideration of the evidence, their Lordships affirmed the Chief Court. (Sir Lancolot Sanderson.) BISHNATH SARAN SINGH v. RAWAT SHEO BAHADUR SINGH. (1930) 59 M. L. J. 169.

S. 33 of the Letters Patent of Malta provides: "All questions which may arise as to the right of any person to be or remain a member of the Senate or the Legislative Assembly shall be referred to and decided by our Court of Appeal in Malta ".

Held, on a construction of the section, that no appeal lay to the Privy Council from the judgment of the court of Appeal in Malta deciding against the validity of the election of two of the appellants to be members of the Senate of Malta.

Decisions on questions relating to the membership of legislative bodies are not decisions of mere ordinary civil rights; such an enactment as this S. 33 creates an entirely novel jurisdiction, the history of which, in cases where the legislative assembly is not itself then created for the first time, has been that the assembly has, by its own consent, concurred in vesting in the Court the jurisdiction hitherto inherent in itself of determining the status of those who claim to be its members. The jurisdiction is extremely special; it is of a character that ought, as soon as possible, to become conclusive, in order that the constitution of the assembly may be distinctly and speedily known. And there is another reason for finality in such a jurisdiction. It concerns what, according to British ideas, are normally the rights and privileges of the Assembly itself, always jealously maintained and guarded in complete independence of the Crown so as far as they properly exist. According to Chinese custom a t'sip cannot be put away who has borne a son and in the Straits Settlements there is no divorce provided for by the laws of the Chinese. (Lord Russell of Killower). KHOO HOOI LEONG v. KHOO CHONG YEOK. (1930) 59 M. L. J. 256.

The Chinese custom of legitimation of a natural son by subsequent recognition is not part of the law operative in the Straits Settlements.

Legitimation of a child, whose parents are not husband and wife, is unknown and repugnant to the common law of England, and no hardship (much less injustice or oppression) need result from a refusal to admit a modification in this respect of the English law in its application to Chinese. KHOO HOOI LEONG v. (Lord Russell of Killewon.) (1930) 59 M. L. J. 256. KHOO CHONG YEOK.

-Presumption of, from recognition of ton.

The mere fact of recognition of a person as a son cannot raise any presumption of marriage between the parents. (Lord Russell of Kilotow.) KHOO HOOI LEONG v. (1930) 59 M. L. J. 256. KHOO CHONG YEOK.
